Part of Billy Jones' Soliloquy.—"But what's the use? they'd soon find out to holler the hour and to ketch the thieves by steam! yes, and they'd take 'em to court on a railroad, and try them with boiling water. They'll soon have block locomotives for watchmen and constables, and big boilers for judges and mayors. Pigs will be ketched by steam and biled fit to eat before they are done squeaking. By and by, folks won't be of no use at all. There won't be no people in the world but tea-kettles; no mouths but safety valves, and no talkin but blowin off steam. If I had a little biler inside of me, I'd turn out and work days I'd run from Kensington to the Navy Yard, and Sundays I'd run to Fairmount."

Curious.—As a train of rail-way cars was passing along an inclined plane on the rail road from Bolton to Kenyon, in England, moving at the rate of thirty or forty miles an hour, a man who was standing on the side of the rail-way, threw a stone about the size of a hen's egg in a horizontal direction and with considerable force into the train.—The stone was distinctly seen by a gentleman, who was seated in the last car, with his back to the engine, and he remarked that when it had attained its greatest velocity, it appeared like Mahomet's coffin, suspended in the air a few seconds within a foot of the gentleman's head. He seized hold of it, and described the sensation as similar to that of grasping a stone, in the air, which is suspended by a thread. This was when the train and the stone had both attained their full velocity.

A back woodsman, in endeavoring to describe the habits of the genery, said:—"They eat so late that they must always be hungry. They have their dinner at eight o'clock in the evening and don't eat their supper till after breakfast in the morning."

Texan Compliment.—"Captain," said a rough looking personage, "I don't wish to hurt your feelings, but you surely stole that barrel of flour." Up to the latest accounts, the captain was thinking of all his friends whether the affront or the apology were the greater.

A Singular Fact.—An English butcher asserts as a singular fact, that he has invariably found the shoulder of a sheep to be exactly one-tenth of the weight of its whole body, and he will buy or sell by that criterion.

On Literary Style.—On style, Milton holds this language; "For me, readers, although I cannot say I am utterly ignorant of those rules which best rhetoricians have written in any learned language, yet true eloquence I find to be none but the sermon and hearty love of truth; and that whose mind soever is fully possessed with a fervent desire to know good things, and what the dearest charity to infuse the knowledge of them into others—when such a man would speak, the words, by what I can express, like so many nimble and airy servitors, trip about him at command and in well ordered files as we could wish, fall aptly into their own places."

A Mischievous spy.—A large ape or baboon confined in a stable, in Elizabeth street, broke loose on Friday afternoon and raised the sash of a brick house in front and entered the parlor, broke a glass ship and case, valuable as a relic made in the revolutionary war, smashed the looking glass to pieces, broke considerable glass and china on the side board, and was hunted out of the room into the yard by the women with broom sticks, in the yard he seized hold of the hair of a child of Joel Isaacs, about three years old, and nearly took his scalp off, scratched and bit a boy severely in the leg and thigh, and finally mounted a tree with quite a mob after him with sticks and stones. We did not know whether he was retaken or killed.—N. Y. Sun.

From the Baltimore American.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

It is good on every possible occasion, for us Americans to ponder the character of this man. We have never seen a finer picture of Washington's greatness than the following. It appeared in the London "Courier," then a leading British Government paper, on the 24th January, 1800. It was at that time cut from the paper, and has been preserved in a family scrap-book ever since. If it has been re-published in more recent days we have not seen it; but we are persuaded our readers will own, even if it has appeared since, it cannot be reviewed too frequently. We have no idea to whom its authorship is to be ascribed.

"The melancholy account of the death of General Washington was brought by a vessel from Baltimore, which arrived off Dover. General Washington was we believe, in his 68th year. The height of his person was about five feet eleven; his chest full, and his limbs though rather slender, well shaped and muscular. His head was small, in which respect he resembled the make of his countrymen. His eye was of a light grey color; and in proportion to the length of his face, his nose was long. Mr. Stuart, the eminent portrait painter used to say, there were features in his face totally different from what he had observed in that of any other human being; the sockets for the eyes for instance, were larger than what he ever met with before; and the upper part of his nose broader. All his features he observed, were indicative of the strongest passions; yet, like Socrates, his judgement and great self-command have always made him appear a man of a different cast in the eyes of the world. He always spoke with great diffidence, and sometimes hesitated for a word; but always to find one particularly well adapted to his meaning. His language was manly and expressive. At levee, his discourse with strangers turned principally upon the subject of America; and if they had been through remarkable places, his conversation was free and peculiarly interesting, for he was intimately acquainted with every part of the country. He was much more open and free in his behaviour at levee than in private, and in the company of ladies still more so than solely with men.

"Few persons ever found themselves for the first time in the presence of Gen. Washington, without being impressed with a certain degree of veneration and awe, nor did these emotions subside on a closer acquaintance; on the contrary his person and deportment were such as tended to augment them. The hard service he had seen and the important and laborious offices he had filled, gave a kind of austerity to his countenance *and reserve to his manners; yet he was the kind*est husband, the most humane master and steadiest friend. The whole range of history does not present to our view a character upon which we can dwell with such entire and unmixed admiration.

"The long life of Gen Washington is unstained by a single blot. He was a man of rare endowments and such fortunate temperament, that every action he performed was equally exempted from the charge of vice or weakness. Whatever he said, or did, or wrote, was stamped with a striking and peculiar propriety. His qualities were so happily blended, and so nicely harmonized, that the result was a great and perfect whole. The powers of his mind, and the dispositions of his heart were admirably suited to each other. It was the union of the most consumate prudence with the most perfect moderation. His views though large and liberal, were never extravagant. His virtues, though comprehensive and beneficent, were discriminating, judicious and practical. Yet his character though regular and uniform, possessed none of the littleness which sometimes belongs to exactness of proportion. It formed a majestic pile the effect of which was not impaired, but improved by order and symetry. There was nothing in it to dazzle by wildness, and surprise by eccentricity. It was of a *higher species of moral beauty. It contained ov*ery thing great and elevated, but it had no false and tinsel ornament. It was not the model cried up by fashion and circumstance; its excellence was adapted to the true and just moral taste, incapable of the change from any varying accident of manners, of opinions, and times.

Gen. Washington is not the idol of a day, but the hero of ages! Placed in circumstances of the most trying difficulty at the present commencement of the American contest, he accepted that situation which was pre-eminent in danger and responsibility. Perseverence overcame every obstacle; his moderation conciliated every opposition; his genius supplied every resource; his enlarged view could plan, devise, and improve every branch of civil and military operation. He had the superior courage which can act or forbear to act, as true policy dictates, careless of the reproaches of ignorance either in power or out of power. He knew how to conquer by waiting, in spite of obloquy, for the moment of victory; and he merited true praise by despising undeserved censure. In the most arduous moments of the contest, his firmness proved the stalwart of the cause which he supported. His conduct, was on all occasions, guided by the most pure disinterestedness. Far superior to low and groveling motives, he seemed ever to be influenced by that ambition which has justly been called the instinct of great souls. He acted ever as if his country's welfare, and that alone, was the moving spirit. His excellent mind needed not ever the stimulus of ambition, or the prospect of fame. Glory was a secondary consideration. He performed great actions: he persevered in a course of laborious duty, with an equanimity that neither sought distinction, nor was flattered by it. His reward was in the consciousness of his own rectitude, and the success of his patriotic efforts.

As the elevation to the chief power was the unbiassed choice of his countrymen, his exercise of it was agreeable to the purity of its origin. As he had neither solicited nor usurped dominion he had neither to contend with the opposition of rivals, nor the revenge of enemies. As his authority was undisputed, so it required no jealous precautions, no rigorous severity. His government could be gentle, beneficent and liberal; wise and just. His powerful administration consolidated and enlarged the dominion of an infant republic. In voluntarily resigning the magistracy which he had filled with such distinguished honor, he enjoyed the unequalled satisfaction of leaving to the state he had contributed to establish, the fruits of his wisdom and the examples of his virtues. It is sweet consolation, amidst the vileness of ambition and the criminal thirst of power, which so many instances occur around us to find a character whom it is honorable to admire, and virtuous to imitate. A conqueror, for the freedom of his country! A legislator, for its security! a magistrate for its happiness! His glories were never sullied by those excesses into which the highest qualities are apt to degenerate. With the greatest virtues, he was exempt from the corresponding vices. He was a man in whom his admirers were mixed that "Nature might have stood up to all the world and owned him as her work." His fame bounded by no country, will be confined to no age. The character of General Washington, which his contemporaries regret and admire, will be transmitted to posterity; and the memory of his virtues, while patriotism and virtue are held sacred among men, will remain undiminished."

☞ The Boston Atlas, understood to be in the confidence of Mr. Webster, has suddenly surrendered both Mr. Webster, and Mr. Clay, for the presidency, as "essentially deficient in the qualification of popularity" and declares itself for Gen. Harrison "on the precise ground" that he has this qualification!

We are willing to wait for the "demonstrations of public sentiment" upon this point, and upon all other points affecting the Whig candidates for President, and to unite, at last, upon one the honest, faithful, capable and true to the Constitution. We hope, in the mean time, to see no sinister movements among the Whigs—no attempts to alarm, deter, or disparage—but a frank, honorable and temperate bearing, sacrificing every personal preference and ambitious aim, to strengthen and consolidate the Whig party, and give full and complete success to whig principles.

☞ We are glad to be able to add, that Mr. Webster wholly disapproves of the course of the Atlas, and will hold himself, as he has heretofore held himself, at the disposition of the Whig party.—N. B. Fredonian.

Counterfeit Coin.—The N. Y. Journal of Commerce says that in proportion to the quantity in circulation, there is much more counterfeit coin than paper. The five franc pieces, Mexican dollars and American halves are all counterfeited, and the market is constantly supplied with them. The counterfeits are generally much darker than the genuine coin and often resemble pewter or lead. Some of the counterfeit five-franc pieces are dated 1830, with the head of "Carolus X. Roy de France."

Important to Farmers.—We have before us a specimen of Flax, dressed by machinery lately invented, we believe, by a gentleman of Newhope Pa. when it is closely resembles cotton prepared for spinning. It presents a beautiful appearance, both in Texture and whiteness. It is taken from the farmers in its rough state, and goes through a process by machinery which bleaches it perfectly white and leaves it in the state we here see it, without any of the loss usually sustained, in the ordinary mode of preparation, by hatchelling. We think this will prove one of the most important inventions, to both the agricultural and manufacturing interests of New-Jersey that have ever been discovered; as it will enable the manufacturer to give the farmer a higher price for the raw material, and sell the manufactured article at a reduced price, and thereby realize to himself a handsome profit. We are informed that a cloth can be manufactured from it at a price very little exceeding that of cotton: and when we consider the great superiority of linen over cotton cloth, all must admit that it will prove a valuable acquisition to the manufacturing interest of our state—to the agricultural interest—and to consumers. The specimen before us may be seen by those curious in such matters;—but as hardly a fair sample of what it is expected will be produced when the machinery is fairly in operation.—Flemington Gazette.

Anecdote.—A correspondent sends us the following:—"There are few persons who have travelled along the valley of the Mohawk, but what are familiar with the history of the village of Sprakers basin, which is very pleasantly situated on the south side of the Erie canal, equidistant from Albany and Utica. It is chiefly indebted, for its success and prosperity to the wealth and exertions of its founder, Mr. Sprakers, a rather eccentric character (to distinguish him from the numerous ancient Dutch families in the Mohawk valley,) and from whom the place derives its name. This individual, some few years since, with a praiseworthy liberality, erected a church at his own expense and presented it to the inhabitants of the village, as they stood much in need of one. A short time afterward he met a friend who complimented him highly upon displaying so much Christian benevolence; but suggested to him the propriety of adding a lightning rod to the steeple, for the greater security from the elements. This to the old man was a new idea, and one which had never before entered into his brain; and, upon the impulse of the moment, he gave the following characteristic reply:—"No, I won't! I wont do it! If the Almighty has a mind to tunder down his own church, he may do it!"—Mirror.

"We Will Endeavor," is the motto of a singing association in Newburyport Mass. It is a noble one. A rigid adherence to it in practice will ensure to them, and to all who may adopt it as their principle of action, the ultimate fulfilment of their aims and wishes. "We will endeavor," is the key to success in all things.

Animal Magnetism outdone.—It is said that Mr. Perkins has invented a compound which he calls the "concentrated essence of the sublimate spirit of steam." A person has only to put a vial of it into his pocket and it will carry him along at the rate of 50 miles an hour; or by merely swallowing 3 drops when you go to bed at night, in the morning you will wake up in any part of the world you choose.—Athenæum.

Warren Township Whig Meeting.

Pursuant to public notice the Whig voters of the township of Warren convened at the house of Ira B. Pangborn, at Mount Bethel on Saturday evening, the 24th of September, 1838. The meeting was organized by appointing Squire Runyon Chairman, and Daniel Cory, Secretary. The object of the meeting being explained, a committee of three, viz; Dr. Lewis Craig, Lefferd Waldron, Jr. and Daniel Cory, were appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of this meeting. The committee retired, and after a short time returned and reported the following:

1. Resolved, That we are opposed to the Sub-Treasury scheme, believing it to be an increase of the executive patronage and power, oppressive and hostile to our free institutions, and subversive of the liberties of the people.

2. Resolved, that we look upon the coming election, as one in which are involved principles of enduring importance. We are free as yet. Whether we shall remain so, must depend on the energy and firmness of the people.

3. Resolved. That the distress under which our country is laboring, are the results of the measures ruinous and ruinous policy of the late and present administration in regard to the currency.

4. Resolved, that we approve of the course pursued by our representatives in Congress, and that we will use our best endeavors to re-elect them.

5. Resolved, That we pledge to our friends in the County and State, that we will use all our efforts and influence to aid in preserving the victory so nobly won at the last election.

The resolutions were taken up seperately and severally adopted.

The meeting then proceeded to the appointment of Delegates, to the County Convention on whom the following gentlemen were chosen, viz:

Dr. L. Craig, Joseph Vail, Joel Coddington, Squire Runyon, Noah Drake.

Resolved, that these proceedings be signed by the Chairman and Secretary, and be published in the Somerset Whig and Princeton Whig.

SQUIRE RUNYON, Chairman.
DANIEL CORY, Secretary.

Another Rail Road Finished.—The Hudson and Berkshire Railroad is to be opened on Wednesday next. This road extends from the city of Hudson, on the North River, to West Stockbridge in Massachusetts, a distance we believe, of thirty two miles. It is one of the best finished roads in the country, and the stock is considered good. In traveling from New Lebanon a fortnight since, we were surprised to find a locomotive engine and cars on a fine rail road twenty four miles from Hudson. But the New Yorkers are a go-a-head people: they drive business with a strong hand.—Boston Gaz.

Cherokee Emigration.—Athens, Tenn., Sept. 5.—We have been informed that a 2d detachment of Cherokees set out for the West on last Sunday. The emigration will now go on rapidly in a few weeks the whole Cherokee nation *will be on their way to the west. We have ob*served that a correspondent of the "Western Georgian," published at Rome, Georgia, has ordered some censures upon Gen Scott, and represented John Ross as being unpopular, and states that great dissatisfaction exists amongst the Indians. If we are correctly informed, and we think we are, these censures of Gen. Scott are wholly gratuitous, and the story of John Ross's unpopularity amongst his people entirely false. In our opinion, General Scott is entitled to great credit for the correct and humane course he has pursued—and we are sure that a more popular man with his own people does not live than John Ross. There is to be sure, some opposition to Mr. R. by the Ridge party, but it is of no great consequence. The Ridge party are pretty nearly in a minority. The few that now remain cannot produce much excitement.—Journal.

From Florida.—We learn from St. Augustine, by way of Charleston, that on the night of the 17th inst., a party of Indians approached within a short distance, of St. Augustine and captured between 50 and 70 horses. Lieut. May, in going from St. Augustine to Fort King, on the next morning, recaptured all the horses, but was unable to capture a single Indian, they having taken to the woods.

Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore, Rail Road.—The important road is now finished with a double track, from Gray's Ferry to Broad st. The Bridge on the Schuylkill is in rapid progress and it is expected it will be completed in two or three weeks at farthest, when we shall have a continuous Railroad from Philadelphia to Washington. The road connecting the New Jersey with the Philadelphia and Trenton Rail Road, will be completed. We shall then have a continuous Rail Road from New York to Washington City, and passengers leaving New York in the morning can may arrive in Washington early the same evening.

Corps in Orange, N. Y.—We can now speak with much certainty in relation to the crops of this county. All of the crops have been taken in good order, and have now safely stored with the exception of potatoes and Buckwheat. No season perhaps, during the last eight years has exceeded the aggregate crop of the present. The our heavy crops of rye and wheat may be added our favorite and principal corn crops.—Goshen Republican.

The Crops in Dutchess.—After reading both sides, we have no doubt that the products of the earth this year exceed any former season. Generally, the wheat and other winter grains are good, and were secured in excellent condition.—And the Corn crop, notwithstanding it has suffered severely from the drought, is better in this county than it has been for the last five or three years; and this we believe is also true taking the country generally.—Po. Telegraph.

Maine Election.—Complete returns make the majority of Fairfield over Kent 3500, and over all other candidates 4079. Falmouth, New Gloucester, and Minot, in Cumberland co., all returned Whig representatives to the Legislature at the 2d trials.

The Direct Trade of the South.—The London correspondent of the Courier and Enquirer, mentions the arrival of Gen. James Hamilton, of S. C. in London, as the agent for the friends of the state in relation to measures for constructing the Charleston and Cincinnati railroad and otherwise help the project of direct trade of Charleston with Europe. The writer says:

The attempt to compete with New York, or even Philadelphia, for the western trade is not viewed as being within the natural capabilities of Charleston; where the nature of the climate, the consequent suspension of all activity in business during the sickly months of the year, and its greater distance from Europe, are all against the probability that no southern port will ever become the grand proposed centre of the western trade.

Temperance in Georgia.—About 300 of the voters of Bibb county have pledged themselves not to support any man for the Legislature or other office, who will himself electioneer by treating in liquors of any kind, or by giving barbecues, or who will place money in the hands of others to do so for him.

The accounts of the corn crops in England are very favorable—more so than even the previous accounts had led us to expect, and will probably have a material influence upon the price of our own breadstuffs.

Expenses of Rebellion.—£500,000 sterling is the official estimate of the extra expenses in the army and orchestral service, occasioned by the insurrection in Upper Canada.

Mahogany.—It is said the Haytian Congress have prohibited the cutting of mahogany in any portion of that island after the 1st of January next

It appears that a new expedition to the South seas is to be fitted out from New York. The undertaking is laudable, may the success be commensurate.

Mr. John Van Buren, son of the President, is now in England, and is receiving the most distinguished attentions from the Court and nobility.

"The Madisonian" states that the Hall of the new Patent Office at Washington is to be the largest single room in the world, the ceiling to be supported by one or two hundred pillars. The portico, it is believed, will cost one hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

A Rare Hen.—Mr. Wells, of Roxbury, has a hen, which last year laid an ordinary sized egg on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, but on Saturdays she laid one of double the ordinary size, containing two yolks; and omitted laying altogether on Sundays. This year, for the last five weeks, she has commenced in the same remarkable manner.—Bost. Trans.

Not Bad.—A gentleman in New York broke his spectacles a few days since, in attempting to read the Welsh newspaper printed in that city.

A gold mine in North Carolina, (Parker's) employs 160 hands, and it is said that pieces weighing two and three pounds have been recently found on the land of Mr. Thornton, Ash, in Fauquier county, Va.

An English paper says—Large quantities of cider are now exported from Devonshire to Turkey,—where it is in great demand, the Mahomedan canvists considering it excepted from the decrees of the Koran.

A Disgraceful Fact.—The Boston Post says, that it is a fact that Card playing has been practised in one of the singing choirs of a church in that city, during service, on more than one Sabbath. Names can be given if required.

A new political paper has been started down east, in Connecticut, with the singular title of "Skunkamug Whigs-arrow." Like most partisan papers in the country about election times, it will probably be made a vehicle of filth.

The Mulberry Mania, or the fever for speculating in the Morus multicaulis, appears to be increasing all over the country. There will be a smash by and by.

There is a perfect mania prevailing on the subject of Mulberry trees, and people are giving extraordinar prices for them, as if there was never to be any further supply. ☞ We should like to contract to deliver at five cents apiece.—Fredonian.

Gov. Bagby, in an address before the Tennessee society of Mobile, on the 30th of August, (he being a distinguished criminal lawyer) stated that in the course of his life he had been employed in some 60 capital cases, every one of which as well as he then recollected, was connected with intemperance.

Somerset County Whig Convention.—This Convention met at Somerville on Monday of last week, September 24th. We understand that the proceedings were characterised by great spirit and unanimity. The following ticket was selected:—

For Council—Walter Kirkpatrick.
For Assembly—David T. Talmage, Henry Duryee, and Ralph Voorhees.
For Sheriff—Peter A. Voorhees.

☞ The steam ship, Great Western arrived at New York on Monday evening of last week, 24th of September, sixteen days from Bristol, bringing English papers to the 7th of September.

She encountered very severe weather. She brought 145 cabin passengers, and many more were refused, because they could not accommodate them. $100 premium was offered for passages and refused. It is estimated that the owners of the Great Western have realized about $50,000 from the two passages from New York to Bristol, and back.

The weather in England has been good for harvesting; and a average crop.

The French have sent out an admiral, and an additional force of five war vessels for the blockade of Mexico.

The price of cotton remained about the same; and money still continued abundant at low interest

☞ We stated last week that we should like to have a short trial of the famed Sub-treasury scheme, to see whether it is a bad or good thing. A whig friend and subscriber has since presented to our notice an article in the Newark Daily Advertiser, entitled "Practical Results of the Sub-Treasury," containing a list of defaulters to the Government, with the amount adjoining to each name. It is taken from a document sent to congress by Levi Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury, in January last. Our friend thinks that this trial ought to satisfy us. We extract some half-dozen names from the aforesaid list of "balances due by receivers of moneys from public land sales, who were out of office Oct. 13, 1837;" of those who are indebted to the largest amount:

Names,	Land District,	Amount due
Wiley P. Harris,	Columbus,	$150,179
L. Hawkins,	Helena, Ark.	115,463
J. W. Stephenson,	Galena,	74,859
Gordon H. Boyd,	Columbus, Miss.	69,198

Domestic Exchanges.—We have been requested by two good subscribers, to publish the substance of an article from the New Haven Register, on the subject of the Exchanges, which, as it is as unquestionably true as are the facts contained in the article immediately preceding this, we have no objection to do.

The article states:—The whigs have all the while stated that the exchanges could not be regulated without a National Bank—the other party, on the other hand, have insisted that the laws of trade alone would equalize the exchanges, as soon as the banks should resume specie payments. Now, as one fact is worth a thousand theories, let us see who was right. The banks generally have resumed, and we have no National Bank, let us then compare the Domestic Exchange now, with what they were under the regulation of a National Bank. Perhaps it would not be fair to compare the present rates and those of 1817, '18, and '19, because the United States Bank had not then been operation but one or two years. Take, then, the year 1826, when the United States Bank had been in successful operation for years, just half way through its chartered life and in the midst of its power. The following are the comparison between the two years, is taken from the bank note tables of 1826, and of September, 1838, of the same cities.

DOMESTIC EXCHANGES.	Dec. 1826.	Sept. 1838.
On New England,	2 to 3 1-2	1-4
Baltimore,	1-2	1-2
Richmond,	2 1-2	1 1-2

New Orleans,	5 1-2	5
Nashville,	15	8 1-4

It should also be remembered that we have but just recovered from one of the most terrible revulsions ever experienced in this country; and that, as the banks at the South and West resume specie payments, the exchanges will be getting better.

Essex Democratic County Convention.

The Administration Convention for this county met at Camptown on Saturday afternoon last, September 29th. We understand the meeting was large and respectable, and great union of sentiment prevailed throughout the proceedings. The following ticket was unanimously recommended to be supported at the coming election.

For Council.—Elias Van Arsdale, Newark.
Assembly.—Daniel Babbit, of Orange.
Thomas S. Pierson, of Newark.
Robert Griffith, of Elizabeth.
Samuel R. Wicans, of Union.
Jacob Manning, of Westfield.
Sheriff.—Jonathan Osborn, jun.

We learn from a correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, that Lord Durham publicly announced his intention to resign his office as Governor General of the Canadas, on Saturday, September 22d. This important act is done in consequence of the proceedings of the British Parliament, censuring his conduct, noticed in another part of our paper. It is his purpose to resign as soon as he receives the official account of the Parliamentary doings, and to be on his way for England by the 10th of October.

DIED.

In Milton, at the residence of his father, on the 20th ult. William Ross, eldest son of Timothy Ross.

In New York, on the 21st ult. Mr. Jacob Lorillard, aged 85.

In Union, 23d ult. Joseph Headly, aged 68.

In Trenton, on the 21st, Col. Robert Livingston Armstrong, Esq.

On the 22d ult. of dysentery, Thomas S. Vanness, formerly of Baskinridge.

In Plainfield, after an illness of ten days, on Tuesday, the 18th of September, Mr. Nathaniel M. Dexter, Associate Principal of Plainfield Classical Institution, aged 24 years.

Mr. Dexter was a native of Plymouth, Mass. His father is the Pastor of the Congregational church in that town,—his own mother, a most worthy and pious woman, died when he was eight years old. He has left one brother, now a member of Yale College. His father's study was his home till sixteen, when he entered Amherst College. Such was his early education, that he followed all the outward forms of religion from childhood.—During his Freshman year, he was hopefully converted, and soon after united with the church under his father's care. From this time to the day of his death, he felt it not only his duty, but his privilege, to consecrate to the service of his Lord and Master, all the talents God had given him.

Soon after he graduated, he decided upon the Christian Ministry as the field of his future labor, but feeble health had hitherto prevented his entering upon a preparatory course.—The Missionary cause was near his heart tho' he had not fully decided that it was his duty to go in person to Heathen Lands.'

The last four years of his life had been devoted principally to the business of instruction—an employment in which he took great pleasure. As a teacher he was eminently qualified, and, as such, has uniformly been successful in the highest degree.

Mr. Dexter possessed a clear, discriminating mind, thoroughly disciplined and enriched by extensive reading and close thinking. As a citizen and gentleman, he was respected by all who knew him.—Kind, yet manly in his feelings, he was polite in all his intercourse with his fellow men—indeed Kindness was the law of his life—As a companion he was amiable, social, and confiding—as a friend, constant and devoted—and the few whom he called his "intimate friends" he loved with an affection stronger than the love of life itself—As a Son, he was ever dutiful—as an older brother, tender and indulgent—and as a professed follower of Christ such were his fruits "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—In lowliness of mind, he esteemed others better than himself, and in him was fulfilled to a remarkable degree the injunction of the apostle "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." In his life he was lovely—his death was peaceful—we doubt not he sleeps in Jesus—Truly "The memory of the just is blessed."—Communicated.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 20th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Cuttings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the piano-forte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of arts engraving, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, manufactures, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conductor of the new volume will be under the charge of EDGAR SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Pay, Cox, Captain Marryat, Mrs. Sherwood, Mrs. Inman Willis, and a list of involuntered others, well known to the reading community In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that the work, extant furnishes such volumes or quivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if were it would not be necessary for a journal to extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, talent, industry, ingenuity, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country. winding a work for the perusal of our fair and gentle countrywomen, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed, on the extra, superroyal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpareil type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Piano-forte, Harp, Guitar, etc.

For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in advance.

It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ATI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Agues, Dysentery, Cholic, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c. and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, have been induced to give them a trial. I them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use. It is my obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and property adapted to almost all diseases, and I feel confident in their power to prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended especially for scarlet fever worms with the sleeping family; I have severely afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot feel like taking after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dippepsia, they are a sure and efficient cure.

GREEN BROOK Family School

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its object aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition washing fuel and lights, is $300 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New York, Newark, Paterson, New Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

The Emancipator is designed to communicate the latest intelligence, exhibit the views, and examine the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known to by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservation of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should day back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired All subscriptions to the American Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institute, is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College, and to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Thoratio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and attention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city, and by rail road as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other places of note, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommends ions of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of the work on one hand, and Henry, Scott and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. * * The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceeding great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private study, and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every christian should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Legends of the Chocorua—White Mountains.

Chocorua received its name from an Indian Chief, who was killed upon it by a party of hunters in the time of peace. It is the northern limit of a long line of mountains which extend thro' the eastern part of the State. It is one of the highest south of the notch, and stands nearly by itself. Its perpendicular elevation cannot be less than 5000 feet, and from its summit is a most fearful precipice. The correspondent of the Boston Traveller thus relates the legend from which the name was derived;

"Chocorua was an ancient and venerable chief of those warlike tribes, who hunted in the fertile fields of the Saco and Ossipee.—But he was alone, the fearful pestilence which visited New England, a few years before the white settlers, had swept away every member of his family. His blood flowed in the veins of no one living. The hoary chief was gloomy and sad, for the young of his people often shrunk away and shunned him. The sunshine of his heart went out in bitter coldness of desolation. In his sadness he dreamed that all had forgotten him; and no ray of human kindness would ever cheer him more.

"The chase once led him near the settlements of the white men, then just gathering in feeble bands about the war ax of the Pequawkets. He had hunted long and unsuccessfully and he was weak, and tired and faint. He ventured to seek for refreshments among these new and strange neighbors. Entering a hut he found it occupied alone by the daughter of the settler, a young and beautiful girl. His heart misgave him. The young so long had shunned him, that from them he could have no hope; yet he ventured to tell his tale, and ask for something to relieve his wants. The kindness and hospitality of a New England heart richly supplied them all. He departed with gratitude, and from that hour Chocorua was a friend to the white men. Every year found him a guest at the cabin of the fair haired girl,' and when, as was often the fate of the young and delicate in those early times, disease settled upon her, the old chief brought her with parental solicitude, all that the skill of his people would prescribe. But it was in vain, and when they at last mourned her with those who are no more, every autumn as the forest leaves fell, a hoary warrior was seen in the still evenings, bending over her early grave.

Years rolled on, and the wild warfare broke out that so often threatened to annihilate the feeble settlements. But the aged chief dwelt still at home. He would not fight the white men. The Indian cause became more and more desperate. The chivalric Sorrewell was carrying death and desolation so their wigwams. Yet he could not take up arms against her people.

"The exasperated tribes at length, in their angry war council, banished him to this mountain, and confined him to its limits, and the little lake below of the same wild name.

"Time passed away, and the weakened tribes in fear of the desperate valor of their powerful foe, had fled from their native vales. Chocorua alone remained. He had grown familiar with his lonely cliffs, and they seemed to speak a kindred language to his cheerless heart. And he hoped to lay his grey hairs in peace upon them, when the Great Spirit should call him away to the blessed hunting grounds.

"But it was not to be so. A party of hunters visiting the mountain found him among its lonely rocks. The memory of Indian hostility burned fiercely in their bosoms, and in the madness of the moment they determined to sacrifice the innocent remnant of the hated race. They carried him to the top of the mountain, and told him of his fate. In vain did he plead his friendship to their people. They had sworn to seal his doom. As a last favor they gave him his choice to be shot, or thrown from the precipice. The hoary warrior who could dream of no other motive for this cold blooded cruelty, but cupidity, the ruling passion among the white men—a desire to possess the hunting grounds, knelt calmly down upon the rock, and with his grey hairs streaming in the wind, lifted up his hands to heaven and prayed to the Great Spirit, in the last agony of a dying man, that 'if his innocent blood could have any avail there his deep curse might remain here forever, and wither these regions to one cheerless and barren desolation.' He paused and a cold sweat stood over his brow. But it was only a moment. He slowly rose, and with a sudden spring threw himself from the fearful precipice.

"It was a terrible sight to see that lofty form plunging with breathless velocity through the air till it fell a crushed and mangled mass of shapeless flesh on the rugged rocks far below."

Always Behind Hand.—There is a portion of mankind who are always either naturally or habitually behind hand. This trait of their character is easily discovered in every thing that relates to their conduct and pursuits in life. Such a man goes too late to bed, and as a necessary consequence gets up too late in the morning. Being out of bed too late he is too late at breakfast, and this deranges his household all the forenoon, having been behind hand at breakfast he is of course behind hand at dinner, and lastly at supper —If he makes an appointment, he never gets to the place in season; and if he is to meet a board of directors, or a committee, or any public body whatever, is always twenty minutes or half an hour too late, and so being reminded that he have obliged his associates to wait, and thereby to waste their time, he charges the delay to his watch which like its owner, is always invariably at least a quarter of an hour too slow. If he has made arrangements to leave town in a stage, especially if it is an early stage, he commonly forces the carriage to wait some time, or, what is not very uncommon is left behind. If he intends to take his departure in the steamboat, you will meet him two streets off as the last bell tolls, and after running down to the wharf till he is out of breath, he finds the boats hauled off, and if he gets aboard at all, it is by the long boat, and often at the hazard of his life. If he is an attendant upon public worship, he never reaches the church until after the services have commenced, and greatly disturbs the congregation by entering in the midst of their devotional exercises.

In short, such men labor, and toil and drudge on through life, just as uniform and regular in their concerns half an hour too late, as punctual people are in season. If such persons could, by some exertion, redeem that half hour, and set their watches right, they might go on in the same easy they do now, and always be in season.

Too extravagant.—A thrifty old dame, in bygone years, made a pudding for a family dinner. Extravagant as she thought she had been, she was rather mortified to find that her boarders were too hoggish to appreciate her kind attention to their wants—and in relating her trials to a neighbor, she pathetically exclaimed—"I made a pudding to-day, and put a whole egg in it, but after all, our folks would eat but one at it!"

Which is right?—One of our exchange papers is puzzled in trying to find out on which side a gentleman should ride when in company with a lady. The right side says one; but which is the right side? The left side may be the right side, and the right side may be the wrong side. For our part we take no sides on this question. We leave it just where the Buffalonian left it, hoping that it may be set right by somebody.

Most astonishing cure.—A blind man we are informed, was perfectly cured on Sunday last, by reading Brandeth's "Life and Death" advertisement in the Picayune. We do not vouch for this; but as publick journalists, we conceive it to be our duty to publish all reports on such subjects.

Courage.—A revolutionary patriot used to relate an anecdote of a man he knew when a boy, who had been a soldier in the old French War. On one occasion, the English, aided by a colonial militia, of which he was one, were besieging a French fort somewhere in or near Canada. In front was a space of the forest levelled by a tornado, and beneath the fallen trunks the besiegers sought shelter from the sharp fire of the fort—all save this one man. Like another Ethan Allen, he stood upon a tree elevated above the rest, returning the enemy's fire. His companion below hailed him to know if he had any bullets to spare as he was out; the reply was—"Hang you, come up here, you can catch a handful a minute!"

From the New York Daily Express.

COMMERCE with HAYTI.

In your paper of yesterday, on stating that in the new Haytian tarif of duties "our trade is still charged 10 per cent. more than that of other nations, and we are subject to a charge of 9 per cent. tonnage in addition to what was demanded before," you remark that it is for some reason which we are unacquainted. The reason is because the United States and Hayti have no commercial Treaty—no consuls or commercial agents, with each other. If it be asked why we have not? I answer because the Haytians are BLACK.

In order that you, and your readers, may have some idea of what this country loses by its refusal to acknowledge the independence of Hayti, I state, that for the year ending 30th September, 1835 our exports to that country amounted to nearly two millions of dollars, and our imports to nearly two millions and a half dollars. And it appears by the report of the secretary of the treasury, for that year, that the country inhabited by free negroes buys more from us annually than either Prussia, Russia, Sweden and Norway Dutch East Indies, Belgium, British East Indies, Spain, Portugal Italy, Danish West Indies or British West Indies! And with the exception of Russia sells the most to us?!

In addition to the above, the imports into France in 1831 from Hayti, EXCEED IN VALUE, the imports from Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Portugal, Au tria or China.

It is believed that for want of a reciprocity of commercial agents between the United States and Hayti, we lose annually about half a million of dollars. Verily the article of dignity is very cheap fee to this nation as Major Jack Downing would say.

Of all the feathered train
Who cleave the air of heaven,
Not one was made in vain,
Nor yet for sport was given.

Hark! to the robin's lay
That pours from yonder grove,
To hail the break of day,
And bid all nature move!
Hark! to the nightingale,
Whose notes in twilight come
From you green flowery vale,
To charm the peasant home!

And see, how heaven sedates,
That birds in time of need,
With insects from the plains,
Their helpless young should feed!
That thus, the Farmer's hope
No hidden worm destroy;
That he may save his crop,
And birds their food enjoy.

And shall the sportsman's gun
Arrest the parent bird!
And leave the work undone,
It sought at nature's word?
Must harmless songsters bleed,
To please the heartless youth?
Pause, sportsman! pause, and read
The page of nature's truth!

God hears the raven's call,
And answers to his cry;
He guards the sparrow's fall,
With kind, protecting eye!
If birds are thus His care,
Who life to man hath given;
Then, sportsman! O, beware!
Nor tempt the frown of Heaven!

From the Farmer's Cabinet.

Lime as a Dressing for Potatoes.—For Potatoes, lime is peculiarly beneficial, as it is destructive to worms, slugs, and insects; the crop comes to maturity earlier, and is clean and free from scab or canker. A piece of Land on Brecon Forest was broken up by trenching, to the depth of the staple of the soil, in the winter of 1824, and a thick coat of lime was spread upon it and turned in, about two inches deep; it was permitted thus to lie until March, when potatoes were planted, in the following manner. A trench was dug at one end of the piece without disturbing the sod that had been turned down, and the sets with one eye each, only, were placed in it, 14 inches apart; they were then covered with dung, and the trench was filled by the earth from digging another, 22 inches distant; sets were then planted in the second trench, covered with dung, and filled with earth from the digging of a third trench, and so the work progressed, the labor being little more than the mere digging over the land. The surface was left perfectly level and smooth, and all the labor required, from that time until taking up the crop, was, to keep the land free from weeds by flat-hoeing; few weeds grow on a heavily limed surface. No earthing or moulding up the rows, was permitted, but at the time of taking up the crop, the produce was at the rate of 780 bushels per acre; the potatoes were uniformly large, and remarkably clean and free from canker; many of them weighed 20 ounces each; four pounds in weight were often taken up from under one root; and from a very large potatoe, which was planted singly, but had received no extra labor, in earthing or moulding up, &c., 24 bulbs were taken, which weighed 14 pounds; most of the crop was sold for planting, and they obtained the name of "the Forester."

The same land was planted again the next year, after the same manner, but without any addition of lime; and although the crops throughout the country generally, were dried up by the heat and drought, these grew away as though they had enjoyed a shower every night, the lime having the power of attracting the dews, and the circumstance of not being moulded up, was peculiarly beneficial to the crop. During the time of their growing, the earth was often carefully removed from portions of the land between the rows, and within two inches of the surface, while roots, like strings, three feet in length, were to be found, extending not only from row to row, but to have penetrated through the rows, by which means moisture and nourishment were conveyed to the plants from that distance. Now these by the operation of hilling, would all have been destroyed, and others, which might have formed afterwards, would have been prevented from extending further than to the sides of the bank of earth drawn up, where they would have perished for want of moisture. Moulding up the rows encourages the growth of a second crop, which not only robs the first formed bulbs of their nourishment while growing, but at the time of taking up, will be found a most worthless part of the produce, after having delayed the crop a fortnight from coming to maturity. To moulding up is also to be attributed that mass of rubbish in the shape of half formed potatoes with which the larger bulbs are so often surrounded.

P. S. Every practical man knows that the native plants, which grow on a lime stone soil, are different in their species and properties, to those grown on any other, especially to those that are native to a surface, resting on a wet and retentive subsoil: but even this last may, by draining and heavy liming, be made to produce large crops, even of barley for malting, the best samples of which are always grown on calcareous soils.

Mission Ode.

[Written for the Plainfield Musical Association.]

Tune.—"Hail to the Brightness."

Sons of Salvation! a message is sounding
Here, from the land of the olive and palm;—
"Come to our help, ye whose strength is abounding!
Come, and of idols these temples disarm!"

'Tis from the remnant yet left, who are teaching
Nations in darkness, the light from above!
List! to the cry of the weary beseeching
Aid, from the bosoms enkindled by love.

Christians, behold ye! the isles of the ocean,
Wait, for the gospel of Jesus to come!
Where, but the incense of idol devotion,
Yet hath gone up, from the sea-girded home.

Send ye God's heralds! to stand on the mountain,
Sounding the gospel to nations afar;
Till o'er the hill-tops, the valleys and fountains,
Beams the blest light of Immanuel's star.

Hymn.

Sister thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze,
Pleasant as the air of evening,
When it floats among the trees.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber;
Peaceful, in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more our songs shalt know.

Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here, thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrow heal.

Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
Then in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

Religion of the heart essential to success.—Religion is poor business, unless the heart be in it. My son, give me thine heart. If this be not given, nothing else will be given, unless reluctantly and therefore not acceptably. But every thing will follow the heart; and where there is first a willing mind, and concern to please, imperfections in the manner will be overlooked in the motive; and if the deed be hindered, it will be accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. Yet there is much in the proverb, "where there is a will, there is a way." Nothing often is wanting, as to efficiency, but resolution; and a fullness of resolution is most likely to arise from a fullness of inclination. Love gives ardor and boldness—love is strong as death; many waters cannot quench love, nor floods drown it. While the slothful says there is a lion in the way—I shall be slain in the streets,' purpose of heart founded not in our own strength but in that of the Lord, (and in a Christian it is always so founded) clears away difficulties, or is roused by them to greater vigor and attentiousness.

Don't be Discouraged.—If occasionally you slip down by the way, and others tread over you a little. In other words don't let a failure or two dishearten you; accidents will happen, miscalculations will sometimes be made, things will turn out differently from our expectations, and we may be sufferers. It is worth while to remember that fortune is like the skies in the month of April—sometimes cloudy and sometimes clear and favorable; and as it would be folly to despair again seeing the sun, because to day is stormy, so it is unwise to sink into despondency when fortune frowns, since in the common course of things she may surely be expected to smile again.

Maxims.—Maintain dignity without the appearance of pride.
Persevere against discouragements.
Keep your temper.
Be punctual and methodical in business, and govern yourselves.
Employ leisure in study.
Preserve self-possession, and do not be talked out of conviction.
Always have some work in hand.
Rise early, and be an economist of time.
Never be in a hurry.—Bishop Middleton.

POETICAL.

For the Plainfield Union.

On the Death of W. M. Dexter.

Saw ye of late, the young man in his prime,
'Mid the promising ones of this favored clime,
Pursuing life's active way!
To the church-yard turn, where the mourner weeps
By a new-made grave—there in Christ he sleeps
Secure, till the Judgment day.

Heard ye his voice, in the courts of God,
Teaching our youth, from the Holy Word,
Or leading the solemn prayer?
'Tis hushed in death!—but the Spirit's tone
Is chanting before the eternal throne,
With the countless voices there.

Marked ye his form, when last he met
At the Christian's feast, in the wonted seat,
By the table of the Lord?
He will drink here "no more of the fruit of the vine,"
But he eateth bread in the courts divine,
In the house of his father, God.

Oh! tis sad to think, he hath passed away,
In the early morn of his useful day—
That dust has returned to its source;
Of his aged sire, who so long hath run
The path marked out for this gifted son,
When he should have finished his course!

Yet, "Why should a living man complain"
That Jehovah in darkness and clouds doth reign?
When eternity's light shall tell
With the sun-beam clearness, that all his ways
To man, should awaken but notes of praise,
That "He hath done all things well!"

And 'tis blessed to know he was waiting found
When the bridegroom came, though with sudden sound
That his lamp was burning bright;
To dwell in the bliss of his upper home,
Where sickness and tears shall never come,
Nor death with its chilling blight!

Ye hearts, who are wasting your youthful prime,
In chasing the shadowy scenes of time—
Who have sought for no higher bliss!
Resolve o'er the grave of this sainted one,
To follow his path which so brightly shone,
That your "last end may be like his."

Steam Ships.—The last trip of the Great Western, which has been made in the face of heavy gales and a violent sea, appears to have settled the question that steam ships are more safe upon the ocean in bad weather than any other craft, and that by them a communication may be safely established in winter between America and England. Indeed, the immense profit yielded by the Great Western will operate as an inducement to run her in all seasons, and we understand that it is the opinion of both the Liverpool and Bristol companies that there will be no necessity for withdrawing the largest vessels during the winter.

All doubts about the success of the 'steam bubble,' as it had been termed, having vanished, and even the opponents of the project now admit that it may be rendered profitable. It is to be hoped, however, that an enterprise, fraught with so much importance to the mercantile interests of the country, will not be overlooked by our capitalists. Our position in the commercial world entitles us to share in the undertaking, and there can be but little doubt that when once fairly embarked in it we shall soon take the lead. We can build better and faster vessels than our transatlantic competitors, which is all that will be required to enable us to control the trade. Among the recent arrivals by the Great Western, we notice the names of Miss Sheriff and Mr. Wilson the celebrated vocalists, and of George Combe Esq. the distinguished Phrenologist. The latter intends to give lectures on his favorite science in this country. The steamship Natchez left port on Monday last with a full complement of freight and passengers. (New Yorker.

Beware!—Counterfeit three dollar notes on the bank of Delaware are in circulation. They are dated September 10. 1837, letter P. payable to H. Warner. Their signatures and general appearance are well calculated to deceive the unwary.

Five dollar notes of the Manufacturers' and Mechanics Bank of the Northern Liberties Philadelphia, dated 10th of Jan. 1838, are in circulation. A spinning wheel stands in rear of the female on the vignette of the genuine ten; on the counterfeit this is omitted.

Counterfeit notes on the Farmers Bank of Maryland are in circulation, payable at the Branch of Fredericktown—letter B.

It is said there are counterfeit three dollar notes of the Cumberland Valley Railroad in circulation —purporting bad, signatures good.

An Infernal Machine.—An engineer of the Croton water works, residing in Bleecker street, saw on several different occasions the head of a man at the window of the room in which he was in the habit of sleeping. Being convinced that *his nocturnal visiter had no good intentions in mak*ing such an intimate call, he set his wits at work to discover the intruder. For this purpose a machine was constructed to act in such a way that when the thief entered the window, he came in contact with a pulley which put in operation two large Bowie knives. After giving his intention two or three rehearsals, and finding that it would be impossible for a person to escape who might attempt to enter, he locked up his house and gave out that he intended leaving town. The bait took. On Thursday night, a notorious thief, in attempting to get through the window, received one of the knives in his body and fell to the ground below. He was picked up bleeding and insensible by persons who landed him over to the care of proper authorities.

To Parents.—The right education of your children is dearer to you than any earthly object; for a good education is a young man's best capital to educate your children well, is to give them a fair start in the world—to give them an equal chance for the privileges and honors of manhood.

But, to keep them from school the most of the time—to furnish them with a miserable, useless teacher—to deny them the necessary and most approved school books—to be unwilling to spend a little to procure papers and books for general information and reading—to do these things, or either one of these, is to do your children an incalculable injury.

You wish your children to be companions of the virtuous and intelligent—then make them *virtuous and intelligent; unless you do this, chil*dren will be unfit for such society as you wish them to keep. You wish your offspring respected and influential—morality and intellect are always respected, and these qualities are always influential too. You do not wish others to trample upon the rights of your children—you do not wish others to lead them, to think for them, or to make them mere tools for ambitious men. Then give them an education—a mind, that they may know and keep their rights—that they think for themselves, and have the privileges of FREEMEN. Ignorance is always the vassal, the slave of intelligence. The educated man always has had and always will have, the advantage of ignorance; and if you let your children grow up uneducated, you let them grow up to be the tools and slaves of others. You cannot do your children a greater injury than to let them step into manhood uneducated in one other way can you do these free institutions a greater evil.

You ought to put into your children's hands every thing that encourages them in their studies Do not hesitate at the expense. Wealth will not make your offspring great or happy—happiness and greatness consists in virtue and knowledge. Let the education of your children then, be your first care.—Common School Almanac.

A melancholly instance of ruin brought on by extravagance and want of moral courage, was exhibited in the Boston Municipal on Saturday of last week. Frederick G. Williams, who plead guilty of five indictments for forgery, was sentenced to nine days solitary confinement and ten years imprisonment in the State Prison. This man had been twenty years in the Lowell Manufacturing company, who had during that time raised his salary gradually from $600 to $1200, and house rent. For sixteen years he had been a model of integrity, and had served his employers with the greatest fidelity—but getting married, and finding his salary liberal as it was, inadequate to meet his expenses, he borrowed a sum of money. When this debt became due, he was unable to meet the demand, and appropriated to his own use a portion of the Company's funds entrusted to him—quieting his conscience with the delusive hope of being able to repay it. But embarrassment thickened around him—detection followed the first act of dishonesty and supply his necessities he continued another and another during the period of 4 years, until detection became inevitable, and he fled.—The particulars of which led to his detection was the forging of receipts from a firm to whom he was ordered to pay some money, and which money he had appropriated to his own use.—Thought he could, perhaps without compunction, go so far, from the confidence in him, and were his best friends, the exposure of his villiany has thrown him into such a state of mental misery, that it is supposed death will soon release him from the sentence of the law.—Balt. Sun.

☞ We commend to our steamboat and rail road managers a practice which is adopted at the South, which contributes alike to the convenience of all, and to the safety of travellers baggage. In leaving in Maryland, you give over your baggage to a man who has special charge of this department. He immediately attaches to it a strap to which is a tin ticket numbered, and he gives you a duplicate ticket with a *corresponding number. The baggage is not de*livered without the presentation of this duplicate ticket; so that the passenger has leisure to take care of the ladies who he may have in charge, or to look up lodgings, and may then send or call for his baggage. So excellent is this arrangement, that the writer of this received a clothes bag in New York, which he had accidentally left in a passenger car in Maryland, by the earliest conveyance.—Albany Eve. Jour.

Interesting Fact.—A few months ago says the Salem Gazette, a very worthy laboring man, in this town, who had been so unfortunate as to acquire a habit of drinking spirits, becoming convinced of its ruinous tendency, had strength of mind sufficient to form an effectual resolution of future abstinence,—at that time he had a wooden box made with a hole in the lid, labelled 'RUM,' into which he every day dropped as much money as he had been in the habit of spending for liquor. The box was never opened till recently, when on counting the sum, it was found to amount to no less than one hundred and eighty dollars, with a part of which he purchased a good house lot, and the remainder will go towards putting a neat and comfortable new house upon it. Such example are above all praise.

The Leeds Times gives some further particulars of the marvellous piece of good fortune that has befallen a stocking knitter of Nottingham, in coming into possession of a baronetcy and estates valued at two million of dollars per annum, besides an accumulated fund of about ten millions. His name is John Lenman—now Sir John—and he is 54 years old. He comes into the title and estates by remote descent, being a grand son of a cousin to the late person.

Bank of the U. S. in New York.—This institution commenced business day before yesterday with all the form and reality of a bank. The number of accounts opened was very large, and the money deposited about a million of dollars, of which there remained at night, after paying the checks of depositors, over four hundred thousand dollars.—Jour. of Com.

Mad Dogs.—Our town was thrown into a terrible consternation on Thursday morning, by the presence of a mad dog. He was seen in the previous evening by some individuals, and some suspicion of his being rabid exacted. His first attack was upon a colored man about 5 o'clock in the morning, but he supposing him to be a neighbor's dog caught him by the neck and threw him over the fence, but in the encounter was bitten in the knee joint, his teeth making several deep incisions in his flesh. He next attempted to enter a house where a small child was sitting near the door, a young girl saw him making for the child, sprang forward to rescue it, the dog turned upon the girl and bit her on the leg. He then passed on directly through the village biting all the hogs and dogs that fell in his way. By this time alarm of mad dog was effectually raised—he was pursued and shot just in the outskirts of the town. The amount of his depredations are not known, but it is feared they are quite extensive, nearly a dozen dogs are known to have been bitten, several hogs—and doubtless many that we have not yet heard of.—Bridgeton N. J. Chronicle.

Hydrophobia.—The Petersburg (Va.) Intelligencer chronicles the death of a young man named Pleasant Butterworth, aged 19, from Hydrophobia. About 6 or 7 weeks previous to his decease, he was bitten by a dog belonging to the family, having some of the symptoms of being rabid. Unfortunately, he was induced to apply to one of the celebrated Mad Stones as they are called, and trust in its virtues. He was seized with spasmodic symptoms, spasm after spasm, with scarcely a moment's intermission succeeded each other until death. He continued in the possession of reason until the very moment of death.

Hydrophobia.—The late Canton Herald details a very distressing case of Hydrophobia which occurred in that place a few days since. A young man was bitten on the 20th of June last and lived until the 20th ult. before he discovered any symptoms of the fatal disease. He died on the 31st amid agonies too horrible to describe.

At a recent Anti-slavery convention in Litchfield co. (Ct.) it was

Resolved, That those editors who have suppressed the numerous and interesting facts, respecting emancipation in the West Indies, and have given publicity to scurrilous stories, calculated to strengthen the prejudices of the people against our colored brethren, and to increase their opposition to the anti-slavery cause in this country, by giving *currency to false and ex aggerated re*ports about the condition of the West Indies, "have basely bowed the knee to the dark spirit o slavery," and proved themselves recreant to the liberties of our country, the freedom of the press, and the rights of the slave.

I send you a fil of papers in which you will find all the news, particularly in relation to the abolition of the apprentices system in Jamaica. I am glad to say we are all quiet here, and in the country. The only dispute is between master and servant in regard to the rate of wages, and that on the estates. The town negroes are working quite well and in good conduct. They are more civil than when slaves. The first of August passed off great quietness; all went to church. The second was set aside for rejoicing; rockets and bonfires were the order of the day.

Durham Cattle.—There have been two extensive sales of these valuable animals recently, in the neighborhood of Lexington Ky., by Messrs. Mashin and Smith. The prices at which the stock was sustained, shows that the demand is greatly on the increase.

The Lexington Intelligencer says—As examples of the estimation in which the Durham cattle of this country are held, we will mention, that at the sale of Samuel Smith, a cow and calf sold for twenty one-hundred dollars; another for thirteen hundred and fifty dollars; others at $1200, $1700 &c. The whole of the stock of Samuel Smith sold for between $20,000 and $30,000.

Sickness in the West.—It is useless to disguise the fact that the present is the most sickly season ever known in the west; owing, undoubtedly, to the protracted hot and dry weather. For the last two months, we have had no rain, not even a moderate shower to lay the dust. In Michigan, the crops are suffering greatly from the want of some person to harvest them, there being hardly well ones enough to take care of the sick. In passing through one or its populous town a gentleman informs us that he saw nothing that looked like life except people who were traversing the streets with dishes of gruel in their hands and hanging bed clothes out of doors to catch the air. From St. Louis and all the western and southern parts of this state we have bad accounts. In Burlington DuBuque and other large towns in Iowa, the same disease prevails, Bilious Fever and Fever and Ague. From Galena and through sun Wisconsin we hear very discouraging accounts The laborers upon our Rail Roads and Canals represented as suffering beyond all description. Upon many of the contracts the work has been entirely suspended. They meet with a similar fate in Indiana.

The St. Louis papers say that Mechanics of every description are much wanted at that city. There are well nigh one hundred dwellings in course of erection, which are not enough for the demand.

House Carpenters, Painters, Ship Builders, Joiners, Cannet Makers, and other branches of trade are wanted at high prices—two dollars and two and a half per day, are ordinary wages. At this time there are no less than twenty steamboats repairing at St. Louis—giving employment to Ship Carpenters and Painters &c., at enormous wages—as the work must be done, and that is a description of repairs that is required every six months.

Butter was never known to command such a price as it does at present in our market—50 cts. being asked and given. The excessive drought which has destroyed the grass, is illegal to be the cause of the high price at which this article is held.—Cin. Inquirer.

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor—

The whigs of Essex did expect that the Van Buren Jackson men at their late convention at Camptown would present a strong ticket to us, —But what is it? They have put up for Council, E. Van Arsdale, junr. who is clerk of the county with an income of some three or four thousand dollars per annum; and for Assembly, Jacob Manning, Post Master and Sub treasurer, at Plainfield, with an office yielding three or four hundred dollars per annum. Gen. Jackson and Thomas Jefferson both said that office holders should not interfere in elections.

Several years ago at a fourth of July celebration Mr. Manning gave a toast as follows:—

"By Jacob Manning.—Henry Clay, the enlightened statesman—may the people of the union cleave to him."

We are sorry that the Jackson party could not make out a ticket without using office holders and renegade Clay men. But perhaps they thought it was good enough to be beaten, and that is just about all it is fit for. It is like boys building a cob house only for the fun of seeing it knocked over in first rate style.

From a pretty careful consideration of all the returns received, we are inclined to think that the Van Buren party are, thus far, considerably ahead. Complete returns may reverse this result.

☞ A certain neutral editor says he should like to have a short trial of the Sub-Treasury Scheme. He is not the only disinterested man in the state who would like to be a sub-treasurer.—Jersey City Advertiser.

The Advertiser certainly can't mean us; we are too slow of foot to even think of being a sub-treasurer.—Rahway Herald.

We see no particular need of legs, in order to make a good sub-treasurer, Mr. Herald; but the Advertiser certainly means us. We by all means plead guilty to the charge. Pray, who would not like to be a sub-treasurer? Perhaps, Mr. Holt would not care so much about it, he being an office-holder, and one office ought to satisfy any man, the hon. S. L. S. to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Advertiser of late has given us two or three pretty hard hits, which it is at present unnecessary to repeat. If we deserved them,—which we do but deny,—we could easily tell him the reason, or answer his questions if we saw.

Whig Meeting.

The Whigs of Westfield, and all opposed to the destructive measures of the present administration, to a National and State debt, to high taxes, and to a Union of Church and State, are invited to attend a public meeting at T. J. Barr's, Scotch Plains, this (Monday) evening, at 6 o'clock. Addresses will be delivered.

Oct. 8th, 1838.

Maryland Election.—Partial returns have been received, which show a large Administration gain.—We copy the following returns from the Newark Daily Advertiser, of Saturday evening last :

From thirteen counties, 17,504 for the administration Governor—for the whig candidate, 16,528. Administration majority, 976. In the Presidential election in 1836, the whig majority in the same counties was 832, which is an Administration gain of 1808.

The whole whig majority in 1836, was 3497, all of which will not be neutralized probably by the remaining returns, as the remaining 9 counties are mostly whig. The whig papers say that the run for Governor will be close, but that the whig candidate will get it.

Election to-day and to-morrow. Let every elector do his duty, and let us know the voice of New Jersey. In this township, the poll opens on Tuesday, at 10, at A. Laing's, Plainfield, and closes at John M. Clark's, Westfield.

In Warren township, the poll opens at Ira Pangborn's, Mount Bethel, and closes at David Coon's, near Plainfield.

For the Plainfield Union.

High Taxes.

Complaints are made among the people that this year their taxes are higher than common. Let us see what are the causes of this. Gov. Dickerson said in his message last October, that the state, under the auspices of the Van Buren Legislature and Treasurer, had borrowed from the school fund, $13,778 49
From the Trenton Banking co. 2,000 00
And that the ordinary disbursements during the year 1837 would exceed our income by 23,956 48
Total, $39,734 88

The Governor then adds that "it is therefore evident, it will be necessary again to resort to a STATE TAX." He moreover states that the amount of expenses for that year, "exceeds that of the preceding year by the amount of $18,839, which excess has been occasioned principally by the extra session of the last Legislature, and the increased compensation of its members and officers." Now as the Van Buren men voted to raise the pay of the members of the Legislature from 3 to 4 dollars, and as the Governor himself called the Extra Session, the Van Buren party are justly chargeable with the cause of the increase of our taxes. This is a clear case, and it is therefore plainly the interest of every man, who wishes for low taxes and economy in public expenses, not to vote for the very party which, according to the message of their own governor, raised the pay of the members, and run the state in debt. This same governor is now on the Van Buren ticket for Congress, and it is the interest and duty of every citizen to vote against him.

A TAX PAYER.

To the Editor of the Plainfield Union.

Please insert the following very appropriate questions from the last Democratic Review, and you will much oblige. yours, &c. J. D.

What has become of the charge that it was the Administration that caused the suspension—after the testimony of the New York banks, and the universal acquiescence in the truth of the enormous self expansion of the paper currency and of speculation, with the morbid exercise of the whole commercial system at first so resolutely denied by the whig press, under the cure of the prompting of Mr. Biddle ? And since it has become manifest that the reaction was unavoidable, what has become of the abuse of the Specie Circular : which it is now evident to all, afforded a check, so far as its limited operation went, upon that expansion and overaction, and was indispensable to preserve the public domain from the rapid evaporation which it was undergoing on so vast a scale—that public domain about which eminent Whig statesmen are now so anxious, that they are unwilling to allow the slight and morally equitable privilege of a preemption to the poor man who is willing to reclaim his quarter section from that wilderness, on condition of being suffered to dig from it an honest livelihood by the sweat of his own brow What has become of that high position of the Bank of the United States, that it suspended, late and reluctant, only for its country's good, boldly ready at any moment to co-operate in restoring the currency, and to take the lead in resumption ? What has become of the argument so strongly urged and supported by the authority of former experience, that a National Bank could afford the only means of compelling a resumption—when the resumption has been carried into effect in a single year, by the banks of a single city, against all the gigantic power wielded against them by that institution, and the enormous influence which it controlled; so as even to force the 'great regulator' itself back to the path of honesty and duty against the most determined resistance which to the famous 'cotton bag' behavior has even restrain itself within the limits of decency ? What has become of the argument that such an institution was necessary to manage the exchanges of the country—when our foreign exchanges so speedily righted themselves as soon as relieved from the incubus of artificial "management" and the internal exchanges are so steadily and certainly undergoing the same process, and so clearly demonstrating that the irregularities apparent on the surface are owing solely to the different degrees of credit and solvency of the different paper currencies of respective portions of the Union ? What has become of the argument that banks, and especially a national bank, were indispensable as fiscal agents of the government when through all the severely trying circumstances of the year of suspension, it was able to dispense with both; and that too, without the provision of a new legally organized scheme of independent management, such as it has twice applied to Congress to grant ! What has become of the charge that the attitude assumed by the Administration on the suspension, was ruinous and destructive to all the interests of the country in its stern determination not to acquiesce in an indefinite continuance of it, by bending the knee to the Baal of paper money and consenting to receive a depreciated irredeemable currency ? What has become of the "recent revolution" of the merchants and gentlemen of New York against Mr. Kendall ? What is now too manifest to admit of serious denial, that a different course on the part of the administration would have prolonged the suspension for several years ; and that to the moral force of the public sentiment, which it alone kept alive and stimulated ; to the rallying influence of the specie flag which it alone kept flying) has been mainly, if not solely, due the happy direction which events have now taken ? What has become of the charge of hostility to legitimate credit, or to sound and honest banking, after the signal manner in which the administration and its friends have lent their countenance and support to the process of resumption ? And now that time has sifted the subject a little, what "has become of all the ridiculous charges that the Independent Treasury scheme would absorb all the the specie of the country, destroy the banks, cripple commerce and industry, extend alarmingly the influence of the Executive, and endanger the public funds !"

All gone—all vanished into thin air !

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public ; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sick stomach, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c. and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.
Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being entirely a stranger to them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. I feel only want to let myself be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public. I send you these few lines. I am very much pressed, since having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine ; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if rightly used, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended- especially for scarlet fever within some of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them ; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick headache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the work will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks.

The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited."—It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian, and to the heads of families—it is, moreover, convenient and arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to posses in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—this well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village should board with the Principal of that department, as there will, thereby, secure all the advantages of Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. EXETER,
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having regaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in Maynard, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College. Mass. Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and inclination to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—as much as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings; exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more loudly to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society has claims upon the attention of friends to freedom as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on steel, by the best artists employed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various exhibitions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of air, engravings, music, &c. &c. Also, the usual drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, including all details, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Mr. Morris, Mrs. Embury Coe, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, we'll known to the reading community. In its literary interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mu-sick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, as to every respect, equal if not superiour, to its predecessors: and it is unfeignedly admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable acquireaents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the scholar and student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most fastidious lover of decency, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form with fresh type, and on fine paper, and a number will be published once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Show Bills,

SUCH as "Fresh Garden Seeds, For Sale Here," "This House to Let," &c. &c. may be had at this Office, from 2 to 6 cents each.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Biter Bit!

ON THE BOATSWAIN AND THE COMMODORE.

It was when he was a boy in one of the ships laid up at Chatham. His master was the boatswain of her; and there were only three warrant officers, with two or three boys, to keep watch on board of her. The guard boat of the commodore's ship was rowing about all night, and if any boat came to a ship that did not hail them, they would go alongside and steal any thing they could get hold of, and carry it ashore in the morning to the steward commissioner's office in the dock yard.—One night his master, the boatswain, had the first watch, and having been ashore all day on duty, at the dock yard, felt very tired and told the boy (Toby) to keep a good look out while he went down into the galley to smoke a pipe—he went down and fell fast asleep. The boy not accustomed to keeping his eyes open, fell asleep also; and the guard boat passing hailed them, when receiving no answer they went alongside, and actually unshipped the bell from its place, and carried it quietly over the side without being found out. At twelve o'clock the boatswain awoke from his sleep, and going to strike the bell, found it gone. He immediately knew who had taken it. He called the boy and after bestowing plenty of "blessings" on him, said to him, 'Now there's only one thing can save my warrant, and it you don't get it for me I'll be d—d if I don't hunt you the Commodore's broad pendant before to-morrow morning.' He accordingly got into the boat alongside, and took the boy with him, and pulled softly ahead of the Commodore's ship, got under her bows and the boy got hold of the mooring chain, from thence to the bobstays, and getting up to the bowsprit went quietly along the bowsay into the foretop, and thence began by the main-topmast stay to the mast head, and finally to the truck, where he standing the flag he stuffed it into his bosom—as it was a night pendant, it was not very large and returning the same way unobserved, got down to the mooring chain and, giving a few whistles, the boatswain who was some little distance off, dropped under the bows and took him in. The boatswain was highly delighted with his success; and the next morning gave the boy directions to hoist the flag at the ensign staff when he should see the yellow pocket handkerchief, he went on shore to answer by the signal that was made for him. He went boldly to the Commissioners office having first made the signal to the boy to hoist the flag: and there was the commodore who always attended to such complaints as might be made, acting with all the gravity on his countenance which such a case demanded. The boat was was called in, and making his best bow, wished to know what he was wanted for.

'Mr. Swabber,' said the commodore, 'I am sorry very sorry indeed, that such a gross neglect has been of late to your charge, that how prefer—a old officer of your character—can't excuse it, sir. The guard boat went alongside your ship last night, and during your watch, approved, took away the ship's bell. Now, sir you must either have been drunk or turned in, both of which are very great crimes: and I am sorry, truly sorry, that I shall be obliged to report your case to the navy board, when you will be sure to lose your warrant.'

'Very sorry, your honor,' said the boatswain, 'ashore, knocking about the dock yard all the day—not asleep a minute.'

'No excuse sir—no excuse at all for such a great neglect,' replied the commodore.—'Why, sir, it such a thing should go unpunished, we should have the commodore's ship as bad as your's.

'Why your honor,' said the boatswain, 'your ship has a full complement of men on board, and sentries in both gangways, and for all that, sin't so much better after all.'

'What d'ye mean sir?' said the commodore—'not keep a good look out on MY ship? what do you mean sir?'

'Why, sir,' replied the boatswain, 'when I found my bell gone, at twelve o'clock last night I sent above your ship, and got your broad pendant, to save my warrant.'

'My broad pendant!' exclaimed the commodore.

'Yes, your honor; and if you'll step outside I'll show it to you flying at the flag staff of my ship.'

Accordingly the commodore and his retinue went out, and were enough there was the pendant as the boatswain had said.

'Oh!' said the commodore, 'the boatswain has quite wontwered me—I had better say no more about it.'

'Accordingly,' said Sleuder, chirping in, 'the old boatswain lore of the bell.

Night Scene.

The stars were glittering, without a cloud to obscure their light; but the full moon was slowly sinking beneath the western waters. Sweetly calmly, like a good man gliding in peace to the land of sleepers, did it throw its mellowing light upon the city, and along the shores of the Seine, ere it sank to its wavy couch.

Who that has once gazed upon that beautiful sight, has ever forgotten it? Who has not been be gazed felt its hallowed influences, and lifted up his heart to the golden pavilions of the sky in silent worship! And who that has gazed, has not felt their loveliness, and longed to flee upon the pinions of the dove, to their far home in the heavens?

Even as I write, she is slowly sinking beneath the distant horizon, which rests on the deep blue expanse, like a long silken lash on the brow of the beautiful. She has thus set through months and years, and centuries. She has thus stolen over the bright water skies creation dawned, and will thus shine until the records of time shall be rolled together, and the earth and the heavens sink into chaos. She has risen upon free and happy states and has glittered upon their monuments. Imperial Rome, rich in empire, was beheld by her ere now casts her mystic and undimmed light upon its tottering ruins. Unchanged and unchangeable, she has spoken from her silent home upon forgotten Thebes, sceptcheless Carthage, and unremembered Philippi, as she did when the world trembled at their frown, or perished beneath their tread.

Her course through the heavens is now the same as the one on which she had commenced since. Like the dew they have gone, and her path is on and still on. Cities have risen and passed away. Nations have arisen and decayed. The hills have smouldered and the eternal mountains have bowed their cloud capt palaces to dust. Oceans heaves with the fight of centuries, have stirred from their unfathomed beds: and empires big with conquest, swept like sparks from the fire. Towering pyramids have crumbled, and they who reposed beneath the shadow, passed to nothingness. Calmly has she looked from her far chambers, all glorious and undimmed, upon these, as we would upon wave chasing wave on the bosom of the Great deep, and still her course is onward and still onward.—*S. The Llama.—The current number of the foreign Quarterly Review points out to the following affecting particulars respecting the Llama, which it describes as an heroic:—"The llama is the only animal associated with man and undebased by the contact. The llama will bear nothing bearing nor ill treatment.—They go in troops an Indian going a long distance ahead as guide. If tired they stop; and the Indian sits also. If the delay is long, the Indian, becoming uneasy toward sunset; after all sorts of precautions, delivers on supplicating the beast to resume their journey. He stands about fifty or sixty paces off, in an attitude of humility, waves his hands coaxingly towards the llamas, looks at them with tenderness, and, at the same time, in the softest tone and with a patience I never failed to admire reverence to see. If the llamas are disposed to continue their course, they follow the Indian in good order, at a regular pace, a very few of their legs are extremely long; but when they are in ill humor, they do not even turn their heads toward the speaker—but remain motionless, huddled together, standing or lying down, and gazing on heaven with looks so tender, so melancholy, that we might imagine these singular animals had the consciousness of another life, of a happier existence.

The straight neck, and its gentle majesty of bearing, the long down of their always clean and glossy skin, their soft and timid motions, give them an air at once noble and sensitive. It must be so, in fact; for the llama is the only creature employed by man that he dares not to strike. It happens (which is very seldom) that an Indian wishes to obtain either by force or threats what the llama will not willingly perform, the instant the animal finds itself assaulted by word or gesture, he raises his head with difficulty and without attempting to escape it threatens by flight, if llama is never tied or fettered) he lies down tranquilly, looks to heaven.—Large tears flow freely from his beautiful eyes, sighs issue from his breast, and in a half or three quarters of an hour at most he expires. Happy creatures, happy creatures, who so easily avoid sufferings by death! Happy creatures, who appear to have accepted life on condition of its being happy!

The respect shown these animals by the Peruvian in dimes amounts absolutely to superstitious reverence. When the Indians hunt them, two approach and caress the animal, binding his head, that he may not see the burden on his back. If he did, he would fall down and die.—It is the same in unloading. If the burden exceeds a certain weight, the animal throws itself down and dies. The Indians of the Lord Incas alone possess enough patience and gentleness to manage the llama. It is doubtless from the extraordinary compassion that he has learned to be what is now termed "

Female rashness.—A circumstance occurred at Newport, (says a correspondent of a Bristol paper) on Monday last, which shows how unbridled are the passions of some ladies when thwarted in their inclinations by their husbands. A woman by the name of Phillips, wished to attend the new concert, but her husband objected on account of her services being required at home, upon which she declared that she should leave her husband's house and go to the play. The threat was of course treated with contempt, but strange to say, she carried her intentions into effect, and no sooner was she off than the second shared the fate; which with the most extraordinary perseverance, she exclaimed, "here goes at the end." The hatchet for that was the instrument used, immediately let it fall below the wrist, and severed the whole of the tendons but without injuring the bone. The lady was destined to undergo the second infliction by having both the stumps amputated, and her mutilated hand was dressed. She declared in the presence of gentlemen although she regretted the loss of her fingers she would do the same thing again rather than any restraint should be put upon her reasonable inclinations.—Bath Journal.

Let me relate an anecdote about soft heads. A Quaker was travelling near Newcastle on the Tyne. One of his fellow passengers was an infidel, and kept continually running down the Bible. The Quaker listened for some time in silence: but by and by he said, 'Friend!' what have I seen in the Bible, at which thou art offended?' 'O! it is all a parcel of impositions,' said he. 'It is all a parcel of lies and impositions!' 'Well friend,' with thou point out some of them?' 'Why! here's the story of David and Goliah—the sling and stone that he said to have slung the stone at the giant, which sunk into his head and killed him. Do you believe a boy could sling a stone so as to kill or even settle and a giant's head?' 'I see my friend plainly enough,' said the Quaker, 'of his head was as soft as thine.'

The suspension chains will be supported by columns of cast iron 90 feet in height, resting on pedestals of masonry.

Important to Farmers.—Grant Thorburn, in a communication published in the N. Y. Spectator, gives the following important statement:

Some three years ago a merchant in N. York, while emptying a box of tea, observed therein a few grains of corn. Concluding that corn from China must be something new under the sun, he had them planted, and as they grew and multiplied. Last spring I received from a worthy friend, a portion of said corn—it's a new variety —as I give it the name of china's tall prolific, or tree corn; as it strikes off in two, three, and frequently four branches, in appearance like a small tree, and produces an ear at the head of each branch, whereas the common corn shoots out but one from the side of the walk; it grows from eight to ten feet high, produces an abundance of fodder, in a large waste field twelve rows corn, with ears from ten to fourteen inches long I counted six hundred and sixty grains on one ear; it was planted on the 10th of May, and had ears fit to boil on the 10th of July. Its produce was much curtailed by the long drought, but notwithstanding I counted 2,320 grains, the produce of one stalk;—being an increase of 2,000 from one. The Dutton (which is an excellent corn) planted on the same day on the same field and receiving the same quantity of manure, cross ploughing, and hoeing, did not produce one half The patch, about 900 hills was examined by many respectable farmers, who all pronounced it something new, and something superior.

The corn may be had of G. C. Thorburn New York, at the store of Wm. Thorburn in Albany, price 25 cts per ear; the nett profits to be given to one of the charitable institutions in N. York and Albany. Now, if there is a farmer between Maine and the Rocky Mountains who would rather pay 25 cents for two gills of brandy, than to buy one ear of this corn, which will plant 100 hills—I say if there is such a man, he ought to be fed on nothing but saltpan and buttermilk as long as he has soul and big carcass will hang together. A stalk having the ears on to show the manner of growth, may be seen at the above stores."

The editor of the Syracuse adds; "We have examined some stalks of the corn of which Mr. Thorburn speaks, fully and fruitfully eared; and it strikes us that it will prove a valuable product in the husbandry of our country. The stalks and ears shown to us correspond entirely with Mr. T's description."

The Provident farmer.—The provident farmer has a place for every thing, and is anxious to keep every thing in its place. If a plough, harrow or cart has been completed, the plough is not left in the fence corner until it is needed somewhere else, but is brought home to the shelter of the barn, the workshop, or the waggon house. The same care is exercised in relation to every thing he makes use of, in the varied operations of his farm. In the spring he does not depend upon his cattle for information which of his fences have been blown down or unridden during the storms of the winter. He does not wait for the gathering in of the crop to learn whether there are any pig holes through or under the fence which surrounds the mowing grass or corn field. He provides every thing in its season,—he looks after everything,—and almost insensibly instils the same sort of habit in all that are about him. The granary at the barn, the meal chest and meat tub at the house are never quite empty, and his wife has forgotten the day when she had not a ham in the kitchen, or the means for cooking it at the wood-pile. Such is a brief sketch of a provident farmer, and a provident farmer's comforts.

The Norfolk Beacon says that an instance of the relief to be afforded by steam vessels to coast navigation in stormy weather was exhibited there on Saturday. During the height of the storm of wind and rain which then prevailed, the United States ship Fulton, Capt. Skinner, raised her steam, and departed for the capes in search of distressed vessels, and succeeded in rescuing the brig Favorite, from Turks Island, with salt, which had lost sails, and must in all probability, have been driven ashore. The Fulton immediately took the brig in tow, and in six hours from her departure from the harbor returned with her prize to her former anchorage. The capacity of the Fulton is spoken highly of, and we are confident that, under the command of Capt Skinner, she will receive a full and fair trial.

Night Boat—Gone at Last.—The steamboat law enacted at the last session of Congress, required that all steam vessels should take out a new license by the 1st of October, under a heavy penalty. She has been a valuable and public servant.—Jersey City Adv.

Hurricane at Rum Key.—During the night of the 5th September Rum Key experienced one of the most violent hurricanes ever known at that place. The number of houses were blown down two always for Rum a complete ruin to the and have not been heard from since. These persons who were killed and many others badly wounded. About 100,000 bushels of salt were destroyed; there is still 30 or 40,000 bushels remaining. The Br. Brig Emerald experienced the same gale in crooked Island passage.

An Important Discovery—The Teeth.—Our friend Waldie notices a discovery of no little importance to such as are troubled with bad teeth. He says :—

"Some time since, Dr. Caldwell, now a practicing dentist at No. 68 South Sixth street, had a favorite horse which had become incapable of eating his oats, owing to the indigestion a carious tooth indicated the difficulty to result probably from tooth ache. Extraction was the remedy of course; the poor horse was tripped up by tying his feet together as custom prescribes, his gum was lanced as we poor humanities have too often witnessed, and a pair of pincers were applied, as we have also experienced; even a mallet and chisel failed of their effect. The tooth was inextractible; no effort could withdraw it from its socket. The gum stanched, and on examining it carefully, the doctor perceived a ligament at the neck of the tooth, and without much thinking of the effect he cut it; the tooth immediately fell out, or was extracted with a slight effort of the thumb and finger!—This led the operator to reflection, and the hint was obtained which confers upon suffering humanity a benefit, which may be esteemed by the sufferer second only to the discoveries of Jenner, or the circulation of the blood!

Subsequent experiments have fully proved that the human teeth are also retained so powerfully in their sockets by a ligament, that it is the breaking of this which requires so much pain and force. Cutting this ligament, causes pain only as the lancing the gums, loosens the tooth and it may immediately be extracted without pain with the fingers! A physician of acquaintance, whose name we are at liberty to mention if requested, has had the operation of extracting a large double tusked tooth in this way without pain, and so gratified was he by the fact, that he investigated the anatomy of the parts and extracted all the teeth of a dead subject in the same way, and with no more difficulty than above related. He is a witness not to be impeached, who with many others, has already been benefitted by this great anatomical discovery."—Phila. Inquirer.

Anecdote of Steam Navigation.—A smart dapper little fellow, with a pattern book under his arm, called in at one of our large carpet warehouses; 'I have come sir, for some orders—here is my pattern book, should be happy to serve you.' The proprietor, after turning over the leaves, said to the agent, 'Will you have the goodness to leave this book for a day or two, and I will send it to your lodgings.' 'Bless you sir, I have no particular lodgings. I arrived in the Great Western, took with me a valise and 6 clean shirts, only used 3 on the passage. I have run about from store to store until I have received orders for 1000 pieces of Brussels carpeting; you are the last person I have called upon. I am constantly on my feet—I dine when I am at leisure at any eating house that is nig., and I pay for my lodging at night—so I have really no settled habitation. I must return in the great Western to-morrow, as I have been absent from home when I get back full 40 days—you are the last I have to call upon, and any orders you may please to give me can be executed and sent to you in six weeks from this time per steam ship.' Commentary is useless—this travelling agent in 24 days from the time he left home, received orders for $100,000 of carpeting.—N. Y. Star.

A Thought.—Were children accustomed from infancy, to hear nothing but correct conversation, there would be but little need of their learning arbitrary rules of grammar—they would naturally speak and write correctly. Hence it is that children of educated parents are generally much more easy and graceful in their conversation than the children of the uneducated. Our language like our manners, is caught from those with whom we associate; and if we would have the young receive in this important part of education, we must be careful that they hear no vulgarisms from us. Parents and teachers cannot be too particular in their use of language in the presence of imitative children.—Pestalozzian.

An American Knighted.—We learn that his majesty the king of the French has directed that the order of Knight of the legion of Honor be conferred on our countryman Wm. B. Hodgson, a native of this District.

Mr. H. has been connected for some years with the diplomatic services of the United States and while residing in Northern Africa and Asia, devoted much of his time to the cultivation of the oriental languages and literature.[1] His writings on those subjects, among which are the translations of the 4 Gospels in the Berber tongue, and his life of the present Pacha of Egypt, procured for him a membership of the Asiatic societies of London and Paris, and the Royal Society; to which he can now add, as the first American within our knowledge, the order of the Legion of Honor.

The distinction which has been spontaneously conferred on him by the king of the French has been announced to him in a letter from Count Mole, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and is as honorable to the King as to the friend and patron of literature, as it is flattering to the literary success and celebrity of our young countryman.

Mr. H. has just arrived from Peru, with the ratification of a treaty between the Peru Bolivian Confederation and the U. S. for which purpose he was dispatched by our Government.

The Mobile Register of the 20th ult. states that an order has been issued by the Governor of Mobile to Brig. Gen Carter, of Columbus, to have the rifle corps of that place held in readiness, as their is a prospect of an Indian War in that quarter. It seems that a portion of the Muckabanna Indians, east of the Pearl river, in Leake co. are embodied, and threaten to take vengeance on the whites for having killed one of the tribe. They were to have held a council on the 16th. about 200 were said to be embodied.

Fatal.—The Monroe (Mich.) Times mentions as among the disadvantageous effects of the drought this season, that a farmer in one of the neighbouring towns, a few days since, found 87 of his hogs newly picked away in a WELL, which was located in their pasture—dead of course. Several instances have occurred in that region where seeking after drought had exhausted the usual supply of water, had plunged into wells which had been carelessly left uncovered, and perished.

Abolitionism.—On Monday the 17th September John B. Mahan, a respectable citizen of Sardinia Brown County, a local Minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, was arrested by an order from the Governor of the State, and delivered over to the executive of Kentucky as a fugitive from justice. The information as contained in the following letter from a well known clergyman in Ripley.

Ripley, Sept. 18, 1838.

DR. BAILEY—

Sir,—I has on to inform you that on yesterday the Rev. Mr. Mahan of Sardinia was arrested as a fugitive from justice in the state of Kentucky, by order of the Governor of Ohio. He was hurried to Kentucky without allowing him time to procure a writ of habeas corpus. Mr Mahan is a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church, and one of the most upright and beloved men in the State. The matter is highly mysterious. The demand for him must have been founded on perjury. Mr. Mahan had not been an Kentucky for nineteen years. Imposition has been practiced upon our Governor. In times like these, orders of that kind ought to be issued with great caution. There was not the shadow of foundation for the demand, unless it be downright perjury. So this innocent man has been dragged from his family, a preacher to Kentucky to answer the demands of slavery. This is more alarming than even the case of Eliza Jane Johnston. It has occasioned no little excitement among the citizens of Brown county. They begin to feel that no one is safe farther than he may have physical force to defend himself. What will the end be?

Yours, VERITAS.

P. S.—Since writing the above, I have learned that a grand jury of Kentucky found a bill of indictment against him at the March term of Mason co. Kentucky! What palpable perjury and imposition upon the governors of the two states.

Two indictments are said to have been found against him in the Kentucky Courts charging him of having kidnapped and induced slaves to leave their masters within the limits of that state.

Mr. Mahan is an Abolitionist, and his conduct as such has rendered him peculiarly obnoxious to slave holders. Highly respected by the community in which he lived, even his enemies do not believe him guilty of the acts charged upon him.

It will be perceived that, according to our correspondent, a Kentucky grand jury did make him an Indian, (late of Mason County, Kentucky;' when the fact is well known to hundreds personally known to him, that he is an old resident of this state. We are informed by Senator Morris that he has known him as a citizen of Ohio since the time he was a boy.

Senator Linn, of Missouri, addressed a letter to the secretary of the Navy on the 8th ultimo, suggesting the propriety of instructing the commander of the South Sea Exploring Expedition, to send some of his vessels on the Oregon coast, and to direct the scientific corps to explore the interior of that territory, with a view to better knowledge of its geography, geology, mineralogy, natural history, and its resources generally." In answer to which the secretary informs him that his wishes have been anticipated, and that instructions had been given accordingly.
The Army and Navy Chronicle says that the brig constructed for the Exploring Expedition, is to be employed as a Government packet between New York and Vera Cruz, during the absence of the coast of Mexico by the French squadron. A Singular Case.—The Louisville Journal says:—"A Mr. Edmund Keene Burke, of Mobile, a most unfilial young reprobate, was recently ridden out of town by the citizens of that place, for breaking two of his sisters ribs, and running away with the third—that is to say, he ran away with his old fathers young wife, his own stepmother and married her."
This paragraph is a fair specimen of the tone of morals subsisting in parts of our country. Such a mode of announcing so aggravated a case of depravity, cannot but subtract from that honest indignation which it should every where excite, and for the very ones it exhibits. Mr. Preston is sometimes very unfair, at the expense of truth and propriety.—Jersey City Adv.
67 It appears from the official documents sent to Congress by Secretary Woodbury, that certain collectors of the revenue received last year from the Treasury, in the form of salaries, $227,635 64 cents more than the whole amount of revenue collected by them! At Saco, Maine, four revenue officers received over $1500, while they did not collect one cent of revenue. At Edgartown, Mass. 3 revenue officers received $2 500 salary, and collected 25 cents! At New London, 6 officers were employed, at over $4,000 salary, and collected $1 19! At St. Mary's 2 officers were paid $1,238 and collected only $1 35!
There were eight or ten shipwrecks on the coast of Florida during the late gale. Love, who together with some fifteen others left San Antonio a few months since for the purpose of trading with the Comanches, and for whose safety fears had been entertained, has been a victim to the bad faith of those among whom he had gone with a view to traffic. The ships and clothes of the party were carried into Presidio by certain Comanche Indians, as evidence of the zeal and fidelity with which they were prepared to execute their bond of blood to the Mexican government. The Lipans are said to be now on the Rio Grande, holding direct intercourse with Mexico, of a nature similar to that which, it is believed, her secret emissaries and agents have for some time past been keeping up with the tribes along the whole extent of the Indian border. Serious commotions from the treachery of these savages are looked for daily.
Accidents at the Ohio Whig Convention.—The Cincinnatti News states that the late Whig Convention held at Mount Vernon, Ohio, while Senator Ewing was addressing the multitude from a scaffold erected in the market place for the accommodation of the speakers, the platform on which were seated Gov. A more serious accident occurred from the discharge of a cannon while being loaded for a salute. By this occurrence one individual was so shockingly mangled and burned, that he expired in a few hours. The other though dreadfully injured, was expected to survive.

New Locomotive Engine.—Among the interesting occurrences of our time, the construction of a Locomotive Engine in the mountains of the middle and the coal field is worthy of notice. A few years since there was at Beaver meadow mine, but a single log house, a sort of stopping place for teams crossing the mountains from the Susquehannah to the Lehigh. Now a flourishing village has sprung up, containing over 100 houses, three churches, a church, 4 stores, 3 taverns, a foundry, several small shops, and a grist mill. At the latter, a new Locomotive Engine has been erected, which probably exceeds in power any other in the Union.
This engine has six wheels, all connected, and is peculiarly adapted to running upon curved and undulating rail roads, without strain. She was put on the road for regular work on the 5th inst. and drew a load of 82 cars filled with coal, over 20 miles in two hours and a half.
Weight of cars,		394,469lbs.
do coal,		170,029
Engine with water	29,000	562,998
Tender without water	7,720
Estimate of water	4,000
	40,520
Total,		603,418
This great load was taken over grades of more than a mile in length, descending less than 4 feet in a mile, and through a heavy curve. The train being 657 feet in length, and every outside flange rubbing hard—in making the ascent a greater than it would have been over a level straight road. The engine, on her return drew a load of 161,454 lbs. besides her own and the tender's weight, up a ascending grade of 96 feet in the mile, upon a curve of 400 feet radius. This engine is now running daily 80 miles, on the Beaver meadow rail road. Her workmanship is of the very best kind, her boiler perfectly tight, and the machinery admirably adjusted for running easily upon uneven and broken roads. Anthracite coal is the only fuel used, except for kindling the fires.
The load thus drawn by this engine, making the trips a day, is equal to the labor of eighty horses on the same road, and allowing 1 horse to be capable of drawing 1000 lbs over a good turnpike it would require 1571 horses to take the same load 20 miles twice a day and return. J.
Gambling on a large Scale.—A letter from Dublin, in the London Times, says that rumors were current to the effect that an Irish peer, who succeeded, on the death of his father, to an estate of £15,000 a year, and nearly £100,000 in the funds, had lost every shilling over which he had control by gaming, even to his life interest in his unentailed estate. Two other members of the peerage are said to have had the plucking of this pigeon. From some hints thrown out in the letter, we infer that the Irish peer was other than Lord Powerscourt, who was in this city not very long ago, and who so grievously disappointed some of our belles, it is said, by afterwards trying the daughter of the Earl of Roden.—*N. Treaty of Commerce With Greece.—The Globe publishes officially a treaty of Commerce and Navigation between the United States and the King of Greece. This treaty was signed at London on the 22d of December last, by Mr. Stevenson our Minister at the Court of Great Britain, and by Spiridion Tricoup, the minister of the King of Greece at the same, and the ratifications were exchanged at the same place on the 25th of June last. The treaty stipulates for the reciprocal admission of the vessels of each country into the ports of the other, and the admission and exports in them of all goods in the regular course of trade as are allowed on national vessels, from whatever ports they may come, except such as are prohibited to that country, the coasting trade being excepted. It contains also other provisions similar to those embraced in the commercial treaties of the United States with other states.

Steamboat Law.—At Cincinnati the Inspectors appointed under the act of Congress regulating steamboats, have condemned the boilers of several boats, and they have consequently ceased to run. We trust that in every section of the Union the Act will be rigidly enforced, so that an effectual stop may be put to the wanton sacrifice of life which has heretofore so frequently taken place.

The "Green Mountain House" on the College Green, was burnt this morning about 4 o'clock. Very fortunately it was a perfect calm, or all the buildings adjoining would have been burnt as there was very little water on the hill. The inmates had to jump out of the 2d story windows. Mrs H gby was badly injured, 2 horses and most of the furniture lost, one shop adjoining burned. Weather fine; no frost yet.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the 26th ult. says that no impression had been made up on the stream by the rain of the 22d. Navigation of the Ohio except in kels and flat boats, was altogether out of the question. Flour stood at $6.

The increase of business on the New York Canal this season has been very handsome. During the 38 weeks in Sept. the tolls were 29 per cent more than during the corresponding week of last year; and the merchandize 87 per ct. more. During that week 33,308 barrels of flour were received at Albany, and 51, 676 bushels of wheat being 6,826 barrels and 29,501 bushels more than in the same week last year.

Fatal Rail Road Accident.—Near Ellicott's mills, on the B l more Railroad on Saturday last a man named Alfred Bell, a resident in the vicinity of the mills, missed his hold while riding out side of the cars, shortly after their departure from the mills, and was thrown on the rails, the wheels of the cars passing over his body, severing both legs, and so horribly mangled his body, as to cause instant death.

The Mobile Mercantile Advertiser of Sept. 20, says: The health of the city is better than it has been for years, at this season. We hear of no disease prevailing at the present time, except bilious fever, of the mildest nature, and to a very limited extent.

Potatoes.—Thousands of bushels of this produce are sent to this city from New York and other neighboring states, where they are bought at 35 cents a bushel, and sold here at $1.—Philadelphia paper.

The celebrated Benjamin Rathbun, has at length been convicted of Forgery, and sentenced to five years in the State Prison. He was tried at Batavia. One c mot but drop a tear over the fate of such a man: fitted for such extensive use fulness, and really having accomplished a great a mount of good. But justice, also has her demands.

Hard Times.—The Messrs. Pells held a sale of old wines on Tuesday, at which the following low prices were paid for some choice lots:

4 doz. Madeira,	$70 per dozen.
6 do do	80 do do
16 bottles Cognac at $12,50 per bottle.

These prices are about equal to 20 and 55 cents per glass.

If a person has a great knack at finding out feats of legerdemain, you may pronounce him a blockhead. I never knew a clever man who was worth a farthing at detecting such tricks.

A person who cannot relish absurdity and wit, and must have a satisfactory reason for whatever is said or done, is a philosophical blockhead.

The best tooth powder in the world is the Ar. mountain bole, a penny worth of which will serve a person six months.

Never praise or talk of your children or other people, for, depend upon it, no person except yourself cares a farthing about them.

A new mode of furnishing masts to steam vessels, by which they may be set up or taken down when required, in less than two hours, has lately been invented in France, the description of which was read to the Academie des Sciences. Authority has been granted by the minister of Marine to fit out a vessel with this improvement, to make a voyage to Rio Janeiro. The improvement consists in making the masts of numbers of small spars capable of being so well joined as to equal the solidity of ordinary masts.

Two more Giraffes arrived at New York, in the brig Carrol, lately, from Egypt, with two Egyptian attendants.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, October 16, 1838.

FOR I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Maryland Election.

A Governor and State Legislature were chosen in Maryland last week. Complete returns of the votes for Governor have been received which show that the Administration governor is elected by a majority of 379, as follows:

Grayson, Administration,	24,118
Steele, Whig,	23,739
Van Buren majority,	379

This is an Administration gain, as compared with the last election of near 4,000 votes,—and we believe Mr. Grayson is the first governor that party have ever had in Maryland.

The whigs, however, have a majority in both branches of the Legislature, which will secure the return of a United States Senator, which is of as much or of more importance than the governor. The returns are incomplete, but it is probable that the whigs have 12 in the senate to 9 Administration—and in the House of Delegates, 40 whigs to 38 administration men, making a whig majority of 5 on joint ballot.

Twelve days later from England.—The steam packet Royal William, arrived at New York, on Wednesday last, 19 days from Liverpool. She brought 80 passengers, and London papers to Sept. 18th, and Liverpool papers to the 20th.—She got out of water and fuel, and was obliged to burn all her spare spars, casks, plank, &c.

The Journal of Commerce says:

The owners of the Royal William, a little too eager to make a good freight, insisted against the opinion of the Captain, in putting in fifty tons of goods instead of occupying the space with coal. The con sequence was some d lay on the voyage, and the necessity of burning up all the spare lumber about the ship. With all this she was barely able to get in.

We derive the following items of intelligence from the Commercial Advertiser summary:

British Ports Open for Foreign Grain.—The Spectator of September 15 says "scarcity of food is now superseded in the bulk of the English people. Yesterday the average price having reached 73s. and a fraction, foreign corn was ordered as duty free, the duty paid being only a shilling per quarter. It is stated that upward of a million of quarters of continental wheat, and additions to the previous stock, have arrived in London within these few days."

Yet it appears from the Mark Lane report of Courier, that there had been a good demand for all descriptions, and one shilling per quarter advanced had been obtained on the rates of Monday the 10th.

The Manchester Guardian of the 19th of Sept has the following;

Returns of Bonded Grain at Liverpool.—On the 1st day of the duty at 1s per qr. star canning into operation at Liverpool, the rate of duty was paid at that port on no less than 64,383 quarters of wheat and on 32,903 barrels flour.

D. O'Connell has commenced publishing a series of agitating letters to the people of Ireland.

The steamer of Forfrarnire, from Hull to Dundee was lost in a gale, on the Feroe Islands: all the passengers twenty five in number perished, save one, and the captain and two of the crew were also drowned. Many of the passengers were ladies.

The London and Birmingham railway is finally completed. The distance was run in four hours and a quarter.

Letters from Egypt say that the long warfare between the Pacha and the rebellious Druses to Syria has been terminated by arrangement, the Druses submitting and giving hostages. They state also that the Pacha has consented to pay arrears of tribute to the Sultan.

A number of the "Bridgeton Chronicle," from West Jersey, came to hand this week. It is a large and well filled neutral paper. It is quite refreshing in these times to come across a paper not filled with pol tics, that being a subject which the Chronicle eschews.

A certain neutral editor says he should like to have a short trial of the Sub-Treasury scheme. He is not the only disinterested man in the country who would like to be a sub-treasurer.—Jersey City Advertiser.

The Advertiser certainly can't mean us; we are too slow of foot even to think of being a 'sub-treasurer.'—Rahway Herald.

There's no telling how our friend of the Herald might not, if he had a Plain field before him for the exercise of his locomotive inactions. We fear in such a case the Union wouldn't long hold him.—Jersey City Advertiser.

The latter paragraph is about as good a specimen of the art of saying one thing and meaning another, as is often met with.

John Jacob Astor of New York, is said to be worth the trifle of 25 millions of dollars,—more than twice the sum left by Stephen Girard. This at 6 per cent. would produce one million, five hundred thousand dollars a year.—125,000 a month—4,183 a day—174 an hour—3 07½ a minute, and nearly 5 cents a second. He will be rich by and by.

The small pox has been very destructive of late among the Choctaw and Chuck saw tribes.

New Jersey Election.

Sufficient returns have been received to show that the whigs have carried nine out of the seventeen counties, and consequently the State Legislature is in their hands; and also the power of selecting a U. S. Senator, and the Governor.

The following is the delegation from each county, in the State Legislature:

	Whig		Administration
	Coun.	Ass	Coun.	Ass
Bergen			1	3
Passaic	1	2
Essex	1	5
Morris	1	4
Somerset	1	3
Mercer	1	2
Middlesex	1	4
Burlington	1	5
Gloucester	1	4
Cape May	1	1
Warren			1	3
Sussex,			1	3
Hunterdon			1	3
Salem			1	3
Atlantic			1	1
	9	30	6	23

Whig majority on joint ballot, 8.

Last year the whigs had 10 counties out of seventeen, consequently they have lost one county, and the administration have gained two. In the last legislature, the whig majority on joint ballot was 23

Congressional Returns.

Full returns are not yet received, and the vote has been so close, that we cannot even guess which way the state has gone. Neither party claim the victory. Various estimates are made—one of which make the administration ticket elected by a majority of 80. The following estimate from the Newark Daily Advertiser, of Saturday, is the latest we have seen, and which we suppose is the most correct:

	Whig	Administration
Essex	1562
Morris	345
Somerset	159
Mercer	283
Middlesex	167
Burlington	543
Bergen		230
Passaic	251
Gloucester	517
Salem		52
Cumberland		30
Cape May	286
Sussex		1605
Warren		864
Hunterdon		897
Atlantic		162
Monmouth		230
	4079	4061

This estimate gives a majority of 9 to the whigs from which we should judge that some of both tickets were elected. In this part of the state, the whigs have gained largely, but in other parts the administration have gained more. Taking the whole state to the administration have gained about 1200 votes, compared with the election a year ago.

Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania has gone for the administration. Porter, the Administration candidate, as far as heard from is about 8000 ahead, and the counties to be heard from will probably increase his majority to about 10,000. Somewhere near 12 whigs and 16 V. B. men will be sent to Congress—can tell exactly next week.

The following is the calculation made by the Pottsville Bard gian Gazette, of the result of the election in Pennsylvania,—in which he was much mistaken. He also made a calculation on the result in this state, very liberal to the administration, in which he gave the state to the Whigs by 1600 majority. In this also he was mistaken,

Primary Elections in Pennsylvania.—The election after judges and inspectors of Elections took place throughout the state of Pennsylvania on Friday last. There is, as usual, considerable swing of success on both sides; but making all due allowances for the exaggeration which generally springs from partizan zeal we have been led to form, on looking over the returns, in the county which we have for sometime estimated, that Joseph Ritner will be re-elected Governor of Pennsylvania by a large majority.

Indian Murders.—By accounts published in another column it will be seen that the French Courier de vera Cruz, from Havana for Boston, was driven ashore in the terrible storm of the 7th and that only seven of the sixteen souls on board were able to get ashore. They were captured by a large party of Indians, when did not hesitate to say they killed only seven. About the same time and place, the Acteon brig Allerby, from St. Jago, went ashore and the Indians killed every man on board except Dutchman. So the Indians do not kill all men all pale-faced men, but only those who have given them.—Journal of Com.

CORNELIUS BOICE.

Nov. 10, 1838. 3m Assignee of John Vermule.

From the London Times.

It appears by the last accounts from St. Lucia that the fifth instalment of the Neapolitan indemnity has been paid to the agents of the U. States of Paris, and is now in course of transmission thither in gold. By this matter of foreign indemnities the success which has attended the presidencies both of Gen. Jackson and Mr. Van Buren is not a little remarkable, and it is moreover highly creditable altogether to the Executive at Washington. In all cases wherein claims were made on behalf of American subjects, prompt attention was paid to them, and the issue was more or less, a successful one. The remittances hereof were so well managed that not the loss of a single sou incurred. In the short period since the accession of Mr. Van Buren to the Presidency, two instalments of indemnity agreed to under the treaty with France have been paid over: also a part of the Spanish and Portuguese indemnities, and one of the Neapolitan, with another, as above stated on its way. The division among the claimants, when received, was always a speedy one. Under the present English Ministry the practice is rather to discourage all claims of the kind, and in some instances, as that of the Danish claims, to demur to the division, long after they themselves have been put in possession of the funds for satisfying them. In claims on foreign Governments, and in distributions of prize money, the same system of procrastination prevails, as if the object were to render nugatory the great majority of the claims, by tiring and starving out the claimants.

Providential Escape.—We last week alluded to the raging fire in the woods in this vicinity. It continued to increase with fearful rapidity, and to approach with an alarming precision, towards the village, from several different points, until last Saturday afternoon, when it was thought advisable to turn out and "fight fire." For a while the towering flames appeared to sport with those weak human exertions, but several gentlemen had given way to it, expecting that before another sun the latter would have possessed of the world's goods would be wind low in the dust" of the devouring element. The wind at dusk increased to almost a hurricane, and increased the fury which had already commenced burning in the immediate vicinity of the southern and western parts of the village, to such an extend that all human exertions were useless. It was at this crisis of affairs that most all were Providence interceded, and to the great joy of all, cloud for the heavens, and in an instant as it were, caused a torrent of rain to fall from them. Twenty minutes more and the whole village would have been in a situation from which no human exertion could rescue it. The rain was the first for nearly four weeks. Altho' it was a heavy shower, yet so dry was the ground that the streams are not affected by it in the least.—Dunkirk (N. Y.) Beacon.

From the Journal of Commerce.

Morus Multicaulis—Great Profits.—At the great sale of these trees in Baltimore, 120,000 were sold, at 20 to 22 1-2 cts. per foot height. The trees were measured from six inches below the ground to the end of the topmost bough. They were all of the growth of this season, and measure on an average about 5 feet. Terms one-third cash, and two thirds on delivery of the trees, which is to take place immediately after the first frost. Buds are selling at 2 to 3 cents each. The buds are delivered on the twigs, and from 40 to 50 buds are obtained from each tree. The trees, trimmed of their twigs, sold at the auction for 13 cents each. Many individuals have realized pretty fortunes from a small outlay, and some within a year, ago invested as much as a few thousand dollars, have realized fifty and a hundred thousand dollars in return—and some much more.

Big Hog.—The Cincinnati News gives an account of a large hog belonging to Mr. J. W. Bell, of Fayette county. Dimensions as follows:

	Feet.	Inches.
From end of snout to end of tail	8	9
Height	4	2
Circumference of the arm	1	2
Girth	6	9
Knee		11
Hoof		10½
Throat		4
Length and breadth of ear, 14 by 9		8
Length of tusks,

Supposed weight 1,400 lbs.

The hog would have weighed, when fully fattened, it is supposed, 2000 pounds.

Joseph Bonaparte (Count de Survilliers) suite and family, arrived last week in the London packet ship Philadelphia. It is not therefore true as has been given out that he intended making England his permanent place of residence.

Mutiny and Murder.—The crew of the brig Brigand, Capt. Furley, of Philadelphia, raised a mutiny in July, when the brig was about three weeks out; murdered the captain and first mate, and set the second mate, Mr. Mott, Mrs. Furley the captains wife; Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Diehl of Philadelphia, passengers, and the cook, a colored man named Brown adrift in the long boat. The mutineers were arrested at London, on the 27th of August; one of them named John Allen has since hung himself in prison. The boat containing the five persons was picked up by the brig Hilder and taken to Greenock.

The commander of the United States Revenue Cutter Madison, writing from Brunswick, (Geo.) under date of 3d inst, estimates the number of vessels lost on the Bahama Banks by the gale of the 8th ult. at from thirty to forty. The hurricane is represented to have been more terrific than was ever before known in those latitudes. No description of one can be conceived of, short of the reality. And the survivors represent that the bare masts and spars were blown out of staunch and new vessels. And beside the extraordinary horrors of shipwreck upon a desert shore, many of the numerous surveyors of the wrecks upon the Florida coast, after their escape from the horrible battle of the elements, only reached the land to meet a more frightful death in massacre by the Indians of Cape Florida.

Trade of New York.—Such is the extent of importations at present that the number of officers attached to the custom house is sometimes insufficient to despatch the trading vessels as soon as they arrive. This is, we learn, the case at the present moment. The new merchant vessels this morning in port than there are inspectors, to take them in charge. We understand that the cash receipts at the custom House the last month were $1,300,000.—Eve. Post.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague the American poet, engraved for the occasion, on tinted paper by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved upon the most approved principles of the art, and executed in wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can possibly belong to the general reader, including original Poetry—Tales and Fancy—humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and European—scientific and literary intelligence—curious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this periodical—notes upon the fine arts—reviews of the line arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—sentences of the ablest divines and other distinguished characters—and the best light works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading, relating to passing events, to the literature, the fashions, the manners and improvements in science, art, the chambers, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those who intend commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communication a post paid to the editor, stating their subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of EGES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Mrs. Sigourney, Mrs. Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Isaiah Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of the forthcoming volume, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superior, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work extant furnishes such a valuable equivalent for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of agreeable matters, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the accomplished student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate a pleasantly upon the ear of the most delicate inmate of the Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1 Barclay street, corner of Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months with a splendid line or mezzotinto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. Every volume has a handsome Engraved Vignette Title-page, and an copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Show Bills,

SUCH as "Fresh Garden Seeds, For Sale Here," "The Horse to Let," &c. &c. may be had at this office, from 2 to 6 cents each.

J. BAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success the pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Sick-ness, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Sour stomach, Loss of appetite, Costiveness, Heavy Cholera Morbus, Sick-ness, Asthma Piles Vertigo in Children, &c. and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them, my family I must say in justice to you, that they are clearly entitled to the above recommendation. They are composed of such materials as to be a safe medicine to be used by the most delicate female, and at the same time powerful enough to eradicate disease from the most robust person, and I do not hesitate to recommend them to my friends and neighbors as the best medicine I became acquainted with, and as I am about to remove to the city, and being an active traveller, and properly advised in almost all diseases and incidents to in season, they might prove of much use to us. We have experienced much the effects of your pills, and sometimes doses especially for sick-ness when which one of my family had been seriously afflicted within several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will be found a public general use, same one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at their operation, but on the contrary are preferred vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

WILLIAM L. PLET.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE

AMERICAN ANTI SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views and record the principles of the Anti-Slavery Societies of the United States. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to the known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have much influence for good or for evil. We believe the public have intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatives of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should throw our influence unduly lawful endeavor to rarify forces and one enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to engage a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

The Emancipator will be sent to no subscriber in advance, shall be continued to one copy gratis.

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education, for the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to prepare its classes that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce manful effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ess and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each constitute a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing, and lights, is $240 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner and residence, though intended chiefly for the use of such as shall board in the family of the principal, it nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected to be over at all times, and can all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on a high south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

To the subscriber's clients a share of public patronage is solicited pledged himself to all that he can to merit its encouragement. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory references will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides such extracts from other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work:

From W. C. Brownlee:— Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The choice, digested and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. In a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—in my estimation, every way surpassing for family reading as well as private reading—and is particularly applicable to the wants of Sabbath teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several excellent engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our readers and friends. It is indeed a goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Subscriptions, also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume, at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—This well worthy a place in every family library.'

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

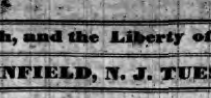
POETICAL.



The following exquisite lines are from the September number of the Knickerbocker. They are replete with the most beautiful philosophy, and breathe the very soul of melody.

A Psalm of Life.

'Life that shall send
A challenge to its end
And when it comes, say 'Welcome friend.'

What the Heart of the Young Man said' to the Psalmist.

Tell me not in mournful numbers,
Life is but an empty dream!
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real—life is earnest—
And the grave is not its goal.
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to act, that each to-morrow
Find us further than to-day.

Art is long, and time is fleeting,
And our hearts though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife!

Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead Past bury its dead!
Act—act in the glorious Present!
Heart within, and God o'erhead!

Lives of all great men remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing leave behind us
Footsteps on the sands of time.

Footsteps, that, perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn, ship wrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

Two Preachers.—In the London Congregational Magazine, for August, 1838, is the following striking narrative—part of the article entitled "Reminiscences of America."

I was amused with the account which an Episcopalian minister gave me of a visit of some days which he paid to one of his Baptist brethren.—Toward the end of the week the Baptist preacher requested his visitor to preach for him on the following Sabbath, to which, free from all letters, his brother at once agreed; but on the Sabbath morning he thought he could discover in the countenance of his friend and host that something was troubling him. His anxiety was soon relieved by his host informing him that that day was a Sabbath on which they were wont to commemorate the Savior's dying love; and though he rejoiced to have it in his power to invite him to his pulpit, yet not considering him baptized, he could not invite him to join them in observing the ordinance of the Supper. 'O!' said the Episcopalian, 'do not let that distress you. Perhaps you are not aware that being an Episcopalian, I do not consider you ordained, and therefore could not receive the Supper at your hand.' Each was amused with the others scruple's! The Episcopalian preached—at the close of the sermon left the pulpit, and retired to a corner of the meeting house, while the members of the Church proceeded to the observance of the supper, which was administered by the pastor of the Church, who considered it necessary to state the reasons of both ministers for the apparently singular conduct of the stranger—expressing his regret, that there should be such differences in the church. When they were seated at dinner, the subject was resumed, the Baptist inquiring, 'How is it that you will not allow me to be ordained? To which the Episcopalian replies. 'How is it that you will not allow me to be baptized? To which the Baptist answered,—Well, I see the one is just as bad as the other!'

The Baptist was right. Both of those fallacies are described by the Apostle Paul, 1. Tim. vi, 4. They are "questions of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, and evil surmisings."

Anti-Bigot.

The consciousness of having acted from principle, and without the knowledge of any person whatever, is a pleasure superior to all that applause can give.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Chapter of a Work but little known.

I said to myself—nay, almost swore it—that I would not seek to see, but rather shun her—for a week to come. 'Tis two days since that—but two short days; and I have seen her—yes, have drunk delicious poison from her looks, and tasted also a far bitterer draught.

At mid-day I waited at her dwelling, ostensibly to see her brother, and we departed on a journey which he proposed, on the morrow, setting out so. The waiting-maid alone was in the house, and of her I inquired after the health of ——, and left any name as an inquirer for her brother. This was not enough. Night found me anew climbing that flight of steps that leads to her apartments. There was a perceptible trembling in the knock I gave. A door near her apartment jarred upon its hinges, and was closed again. 'Twas, true, her mother or herself who was approaching. The step was light—'twas she! The hand of welcome was extended—but it was the hand which, at the threshold of her door—all—every guest—such is her kind and frank demeanor—might hold as I did. Does each rude palm trem ble thus, thought I, when it experiences this gentle pressure! She had been ill when last I saw her; was it wonder, then, that I eagerly asked how she did, in a tone far different from that which commonly accosts ears the daily question, that requires no answer but one like itself—"I'm better." Such answer she gave—she was quite well."—Quite well! What! in two days recovered? In two days restored to robust and perfect health? What wrought the cure? The doctor? Ay—the doctor—but not his prescriptions—not his preparations—but his presence. Or was it that the question, ay, even in its eager tone, fell idle on ears filled with the echo of the honeyed words of praise which lips beloved had dropped into them? Yes—it was so: and all that which, to others, was a melody, the tone of sympathy—the sound of interest and kindness, was from any one but him the jarring gibberish of an unknown tongue—the harshness of rude notes that own no unison with the soft chords which yet reverberate to the touch of love!—or but as the breathings of the idle wind, which, where it listeth, bloweth, and who is there that he doth it? Unasked I entered the parlour. As the door receded from my touch there was no sound of voice heard to say welcome. Was she then alone? Was I so fortunate as thus to see within my grasp the long prayed for opportunity? Deceitful hope! Miserable, miserable disappointment! He was there—he, he whom I will not name, and cannot—dare not hate; and yet unhitingly must envy! Count me your ransoms, captive princes; reckon me your debts, proud prostrate nations; tell me your wealth, pale Avarice—man hoarders;—sum, sum the dreamingwor ld Dorado riches, ye architects of fancy, and arithmeticians of imagination;—say, ye pale tremblers by the furnace gleam, ye hoarders o'er the alembick—watchers of projection's moment, say how much your stone the touch of which 'makes gold, would turn of lead into the yellow ore—and I will answer, more—yes, ten times told, than all your made up sums, were I their master, I would give to be that he; if that be she loves him but the tithe that I do dost upon her!

Did I turn pale when I beheld him? Yes. Did my tongue falter, and my brain come thick, like Macbeth's fancies, when I tried parlance? Did it? Did it not! There was emotion in my finger tips—feeling in every hair, that had the chill of the damp clamminess which forced its way through each pore upon my brow. Yet I did talk—but it was wildly; and I durst not look at her fond glances, as they shot across the narrow space that severed him and her. Ah! then the marble of that sculptured mantlepiece, on which Macbeth's fancies, when I tried parlance? Did it? Did it not! There was emotion in my finmy head was rested, seemed less hard—and oh! it was less cold, methought, than Fate—My Fate!

There was conversation—I was absent; there was argument, I was dogmatical; there was wit, I was dull; there was pleasure, and I was pain. Pain—pain! why, we have pain when we are hungered; are in pain when our fingers bleed—then what poor puling 'tis to call that bondage pain which then I sat beneath; that which quivered on my lips, beat in my pulse, and trembled in my hand. It was agony. Yet seemed I calm as the weltering wave—hugh, like Leviathan, which heaves, but makes no noise, rolls on, yet has no foaming crest, or wreck-strewn head to mark its site! awful.

Lacking aught to say, I carelessly observed that this was my day's second visit. 'Ay!' was the answer, 'were you here before? Oh! by the by—the girl said you were!'

That question—that idle question, and that 'by the by' that ran in absence of a thing forgotten, how did it stamp despair upon my soul, and turn the very core of hope into a coin where disappointment image graved; and its cold superscription, while it told me that 'all—all is vanity, gave currency to that with which the debts of love's good promises were cancelled.

Mother and brother entered—I was rooted to the chair, which, but for their coming, I should have risen to meet. Their seating themselves offered—and 'twas seized by her—the opportunity of placing herself near, nearer him. Stories were told, to which I seemed to listen. What were they? I cannot tell, for I could not hear on, nor sit still. For—for, but I knew that my rising would call him up also, and I (oh! madway in passion's wild career, how glorious 'tis to stay your reason turn, and taking its rock amid the raging stream; yes, from that station beat the assailing elements of wild emotion, which courses on—which baffled there, and though they near the goal of madness, leave that spot behind them, amid the mind's waste, scathless!) I, for I knew that I must quarrel with him, resolved that he should wait behind me—and he did so. I made him. I dreamt he had insulted me, or wished he had—I burnt to stab him or to be stabbed by him, the latter rather; and had done it, if not the weapon of a warmer clime, where the hand answers to the passions will, and wears its strength but for the hearts command, had hung about me, and he had been calm, proudly and coldly calm in his fair triumph, and had followed me.

Few were the wiles that detained me, cold the hands that pressed themselves to mine; (She did not proffer hers;) hurried the step that bore me to the door. She did not now place kindly on my shoulder that cloak she hallowed with her touch, till that Elijah's mantle was, for inspiration, but a fragment dropped to it. She did not (she was wont to do so) accompany me to the threshold where she welcomed me.—No! no! there was not there that look which made me to turn and turn upon the landing place, and linger on the steps. What then were steps to me? One dash—one whirl—and rush and shock, and I was on the ground, and in the air, the free, unwalled, up air—beneath the peaceful and unpassionate stars that have their gentle courses in the sky. Yet I could not breathe. There was a dew, the first fresh dew of spring floating mid air, and moistening the wind. Yet was I parched as if Sirocco had cawrapped me. There was fire within which all the dew on Hermon could not quench. 'The flame leaped up my throat, and as it touched my lips it withered them. My tongue rattled against my dry rough teeth, and there was not a damp of moisture on my frame, save where one drop on either temple quivered ere it fell (cold as her heart to me.)

To fly along the crowded streets and silent lanes which lie between her home and that of the friend nearest, asked a time so brief, that as it passed away its pinion left no mark on memory's tablets. Hunger is pain, but thirst, thirst, thirst is agony. On a table in the house of—a pitcher stood, a grasp, a grasp, a drop, but one small drop of hot and heavy water; a gaze wild as the Vampyre's, or the earth stained Goul's—a tetter and a brave—brave of the heart as laborer—and so do not the strings crack—(would they had broken rather!) and one weak dizzy whirl is all I knowabout of felt, till life as with a gasp it fled, with one returned; and the pulse, which had paused resumed its beat.

Who hath not felt the desta rdness of words? Who hath in the heart's alembick, heated up with passion's furnace glow, hath ever thought fine and divine the mightiest might of Language to something far more forceful, will not own her weak? She, the very essence of all spoken tongues is for the purposes that speech was made! Give, then, imagination but the metal bar, and it will coin for its own payment. I struggled, battled, conquered. I could not say to the whirlwind of passion "Peace, be still," or "listen to the voice of the Reimeenner," but I reefed my canvass, my canvass, nay, cut the masts by the board, tieu myself to the rudder, and now ride, while the gale sweeps past, in the shelter of philosophick tranquility. I will not be its fern; I remembered that I was a man—and I am so—CALM.

Furious Attack on Mr. Van Amburg, of Astley's Amphitheatre, by one of his Tigers.—Since Wednesday last the principal topic of conversation in the theatrical world has been the furious attack made upon Mr. Van Amburg, whose exhibition at Astley's Royal Amphitheatre of lions, tigers, leopards and other animals of the forest, in the grand zoological spectacle entitled the "Lion Conqueror of Pompeii," has excited within these few days past so much public attention. Mr. Van Amburg has been styled by the philologes of the above equestrian establishment, as the brute tamer, and certainly the appellation is well applied as the following daring feat will prove, for never was the courage or presence of mind of man put to a severer test. From the information obtained by our reporter yesterday, it seems an authentic fact, it appears that on Wednesday last a rehearsal was going on in the circus of the theatre, when Mr. Van Amburg, wishing one of his tigers to perform a certain feat, which the animal was utterly unable or unwilling to accomplish, had resource to severe corporeal punishment, which chastisement he inflicted with a large horsewhip. Smarting under the pain of the lash, the animal became incensed, and suddenly springing upon Mr. Van Amburg, who instantly on turning round, close to the ground from the strength and weight of his incensed assailant. Mr. Van Amburg who is of Herculian cast, and possessing extraordinary muscular power, instantly perceived the intention of the animal, which was that of tearing him to pieces, and with the courage and presence of mind which few men possess, seized his foe by the lip of the lower jaw, and thus pinioned as a bull dog would on an ox or a bull. A long and fearful struggle then ensued, in the course of which both the man and the tiger rolled over several times. At length Mr. Van Amburgh got the better of his foe by throwing him on his back at the same time kneeling on his stomach, and with his other hand, which was till now unengaged, commenced striking the prostrate animal with his clenched fist, the blows following in quick succession, over the head, face, and particularly his nose, until the blood flowed from the subdued animal which here quivered under the grasp of his conqueror. At last, Mr. Van Amburgh, perceiving that he had completely overcome him, released his hold, and the animal finding himself at liberty, retired a short distance from his master, and crouched down as if severely suffering from the punishment he had received. It may here be proper to mention that the performers (as we understood) did not pay any attention to the struggle, considering that it was merely a rehearsal of the part to be played in the evening, until they saw him administering the severe chastisement as before described to the enraged animal, and its efforts to release his hold. The encounter did not at all impede the entertainments of the evening.—John Bull.

HUSBANDRY.

From the Farmer's Cabinet.

The Improvident Farmer.—Many years back I resided in one of the neighboring counties, on land adjoining the property of a full blooded improvident farmer. He had a comfortable house, a noble barn, a fertile farm—he was industrious so also were his household,—yet every day and all day long something or other was out of order and going wrong. If any thing was broken, he had the wherewithal to mend it, but just at the time of extremity it always seemed to be mislaid. If a staple was needed, the workshop having been in vain searched, a laborer from the plough or the harvest field, was sent for one to the blacksmith shop,—and it not unfrequently happened that by the time of his return, some one would recollect that there was a half a dozen, stowed away over the kitchen mantle. If either of his horses had lost a shoe he was rarely taken to be shod until he had become lame. The pigs were not penned up until they had wasted more corn than they were worth to their owner, nor until some of them had been shot by his neighbors. It would be vain for me to attempt to tell how many times a day the old farmer was called from his regular labor, to drive the pigs or the cattle from the grass, the grain the corn or the garden. All these out of door troubles were very vexatious and very expensive,—and then to crown the whole he was as improvident as respected the wants of his household as he was of his stock or his farm. His wood pile was often exhausted, and his fences not unfrequently suffered for it. It was a very rare occurrence for him to send grain to the mill until the last portion of flour had been consumed at home. This at certain seasons of the year, particularly in harvest time, when the streams were frequently low, occasioned them at times to be for a day or two without any bread.

This improvidence introduced the old man and his family into many disagreeable scrapes: for their friends often called to visit them when there was neither bread nor flour on the premises. One afternoon a large company found them in this condition. The family received the visitors with great courtesy, and every thing was agreeable and pleasant, until the females recollected it would soon be supper time. All was now consternation and perplexity. The old man was summoned and despatched to negotiate at the neighboring houses for provender. He was to beg or borrow cakes, bread—any preparation of flour—his distressed wife and daughter were willing to receive.

His course led him to one of the neighbors, whose wife was a most notable housewife, an untiring talker, and one of such boundless kindness, that she was ready at any hour of the day or night, without fee or reward to visit the sick or the wounded. As it happened, the old man had no bread to spare,—and feeling great sympathy with her female neighbors, she gave loose to that instrument which never grows dull by using, and administered therewith a real chastisement on the bread hunter for not keeping his family better supplied with flour. But whilst in the midst of this infliction, she espied a nice pot of buckwheat batter just ready for baking. Her tongue came to a rest; she drew it forth, and her good nature triumphing were over a desire to scold, she told the old man his family were quite welcome to it. He accepted the present with many thanks and rejoiced to think he had now obtained a panacea for all the trouble of his household. Grasping the treasure in his arms, he sallied forth,—passed safely through big gates and little gates, over bars and fences, until he at last sat astride of the topmost rail of that which surrounded his dwelling. There he rested himself, and while his countenance beamed with exultation and triumph, he looked as though he had never known sorrow. Suddenly the whole company of strangers who had started for a ramble round the farm turned the corner of the house and came plump upon him. They stared with astonishment to see the old man perched up in this manner, grasping the huge pot in his arms,—and he viewed them with a bewildering consternation. His muscles relaxed, his arms could no longer retain their treasure, the earthen vessel was broken by the fall,—and his imagined supper was spread in one great cake on the green grass, for the sun to bake and the pigs to eat at their leisure. N. E.

A drunken Irish Cartman exacted a tragedy on Monday night, in the Bowery. Two brigades of city volunteers were returning in column from the parade ground; and the cartman in question came in Michael Hogey, drove his horse and cart furiously into the soldiery knocked down some fifty or sixty of them killing or nearly killing several of the number. He was finally checked in his charge, knocked down and bayonetted, and probably would have been killed on the spot, but for the interference of one of the Aldermen, who happened also to be in command of a regiment. The wretch was nearly killed as it was.—N. Y. Gazette.

Abstractions of Human Life.

Not to go to bed when you are sleepy, because it is not a certain hour.

To send your son to travel into foreign countries ignorant of the history, constitution, manners and language of his own.

To take offence at the address or carriage of any man, with whose mind and manners we are unacquainted.

To expect punctuality from an idle man.

To rise early on a cold morning when you have nothing to do.

To think for yourself, and declare your real opinions in every society you frequent.

To give advice to, or argue with, a fool.

To occupy the attention of a large company by the recital of an occurrence interesting to your self alone.

To ask advice of a man who has always mismanaged his own affairs.

To pronounce dogmatically upon the conduct of all our neighbors and acquaintances, and not to give them credit for knowing their own circumstances and views of happiness better than we can pretend to.

To expect that your friends will remember you after you have thought proper to forget them.

To give any man wise in his own conceit, or superior to you in life, a candid opinion when he asks your advice.

To live fifty years and be surprised at any thing.

Energy of Character.—Energy of character is the philosopher's stone of this life, and should be engraved upon every heart. It is that which has peopled the temple of fame—that which has filled the historic pages with great names, and the civil and military world, that which has brought a race from barbarism, drawn the veil from science, and developed the wondrous powers of Nature. It makes man great and makes men rich. First or last, it brings success. Without it Webster would have been a New Hampshire lawyer, Tom Ewing a buckeye salt boiler, and Ben Franklin a journeyman printer. Without it Demosthenes would have stammered on to his grave, and Cincinnatus died a common soldier. Shakespeare would have been shot for poaching, Pope died selling tape, Roscoe lived selling beer "by the small"—and Bonaparte have gone out of the world a Corsican bully. With it, each one has not only done much good for himself, much for his day and generation—but much for the world in the past, the present, and future.

Energy of character will do the same thing for any man in a small way that it has done for these. Give the lawyer energy of character, and he will succeed at the bar without talent. It is the secret by which the merchant, the artist, the scholar, and the mechanic, arrive at distinction and wealth. If they fail once, they try again; no contrary wind blows them down: or, if down, they will not stay down. The man who has energy of character will rise in spite of fortune and in spite of opposition. Give a man energy, and he is a made man, put him where you will, and surround him by what you will. It is this fact that gives us confidence that the American people will rise from their present depression as soon as the blast has blown over that threw them down. In defiance of sub-treasuries, suspensions, bad currency, and every other evil that malice and ignorance can fix upon them, the People of this country have energy enough for use and to prosper. He who gives up in despair, and cuts away the sheets of his canvass, because he finds contrary winds in his passage, is but a poor navigator.—Louisville Gaz.

Visiting Cuba for Health.—The Boston Medical Journal states that excellent preparations have been made near Mantanzas for the accommodation of invalids from the United States. Formerly the difficulty of procuring suitable lodgings prevented many from passing the winter in that beautiful island, who felt the necessity of fleeing from its boisterous approaches in New England. The place now organized with express reference to this class of strangers, is located at San Pedro de Hadean, eighteen miles from Matanzas. Board ranges at about fourteen dollars a week. The keeping of a horse is six dollars a month; the hire of one is thirty dollars per month.—Steamboats leave Havanna and Matanzas every other day, the fare being six dollars. Board by the day at either place is two dollars and fifty cents. A Horse costs from $68 to $160 There who can afford the expense should ship their own, as native breed being small and inferior. Invalids, to derive the most advantage from the mild air of Cuba, should leave here by the 1st of October, and remain till May. Physicians, in recommending a voyage to their consumptive patients, should keep this circumstance in recollection.

A Dear Kiss.—A curious trial was recently held at Middlesex Sessions, in England Thomas Saverland, the prosecutor, stated, that on the day after Christmas he was in the tap room, the defendant, Caroline Newton, and her sister who had come from Birmingham, were present. The latter jokingly observed that she had promised her sweatheart that no man should kiss her while absent. It being holiday time, Saverland considered this a challenge, and caught hold of her and kissed her. The young woman took it as a joke, but her sister the defendant, said she would like as little of that kind of fun as he pleased. Saverland told her if she was angry he would kiss her also: He then tried to do it, and they fell to the ground. On rising, the woman struck him: he again tried to kiss her, and in the scuffle she bit off his nose which she spit out of her mouth The action was brought to recover damages for the loss of the nose. The defendant said he had no business to kiss her; if she wanted kissing she had a husband to kiss her, a better looking man than ever the prosecutor was. The jury without hesitation acquitted her; and the chairman said, that if any man attempted to kiss a woman against her will she had a right to bite off his nose if she had a fancy for so doing.

A complete yet puzzling answer.—"Did you or did you not speak of me, sir, the other night!" said a peremptory gentleman to a fellow collegian now eminent in Massachusetts. "I did or did not speak of you,' was the reply.

Noble Instance of Indulgence.—On Wednesday the 22d of July, the friends and former creditors of William Henry Esq. entertained him at dinner at the Commercial Hotel Belfast on the occasion of presenting him with a superb piece of plate commemorating of his having, of his own accord discharged the balance of the engagements of his house at the period of their having stopped pay. ments in the year 1820.—This large sum, amounting to upwards of £13,000, has been recently handed to the creditors, or their survivors and representatives, by Mr. Henry; one of those instances of high minded justice and honor which reflect distinction and credit upon the community amongst whom they occur.

Awful Murder.—A Mrs. Bates was most inhumanly murdered by the discharge of a rifle through the window of her dwelling house, on the second instant, in the town of Shaftsbury, Vt. near the New York line. The culprit [who is supposed to be a brother of of the deceased's husband] was apprehended within a mile of the house, and secured before his victim breathed her last. which took place about 9 o'clock the same evening.

The supposed provocation, if provocation it can be called, for the unparalleled transaction, was the circumstance that the father of the brothers was about to negotiate with Philorman to take the principal share of his property and take cars of him through his old age. The deceased was of amiable and excellent character, and highly esteemed by the father and all who knew her and to this circumstance the murderer probably supposed his brother was principally indebted for the good fortune about to befal him. This is all that thus far appears.

Shocking occurrence.—On Saturday Sept. 23d as three boys were on a hunting excursion in the town of Marlborough, Ulster county, New York two of them ascended a tree for nuts. The other took a gun and said, here are two theives and I will shoot them, at the same time discharged the gun and wounded one in the hip and the other was dreadfully mangled in the face, having both eyes blown out, his teeth broken, and otherwise so seriously injured as to preclude all hopes of his recovery.

Singular Death.—We learn that John M'Nally a young man employed in twisting cotton at a manufactory in Phœnixville, above Norristown on Saturday last sent to an apothecary for pulverized chalk, and through mistake received sugar of lead. In applying the powder to the thread he had occasion to wet his fingers from his mouth and consequently communicated the substance to his tongue and lips. He had used it but a short time before he was seized with violent sickness, and soon died.—Nat Gaz.

Beat that Who Can.—We have before us a potatoe that would fill a pot of ordinary size and afford a meal for some half dozen individuals, even were they genuine Paddies whose love of potatoes is proverbial. It was exhumed in the field of our friend Dr. Daniel Sargent, is of irregular shape, its circumference being twenty-three inches, and its weight three pounds and one ounce, avirdupoise. We don't wonder the doctor boasts shield his pestle and mortar from physic to the dogs,' when he raises potatoes like this.—Kinderhook Sentinel.

Innate Appetite.—Sir George McKenzie in his Phrenological Essays mentions the following curious facts, witnessed by Sir James Hallr He had been engaged in making some experiments on hatching eggs by artificial heat, and on one occasion observed in one of his boxes a chicken in the act of breaking from his confinement. It happened that just as the creature was getting out of his shell, a spider began to run along the box, when the chicken darted forward seized and swallowed it.

A Good Kind of Ignorance.—It was remarked by a British officer after the battle of Lundy's Lane, near Fort Erie, that he had visited all Europe under the banner of Napoleon, and had been engaged in the severest battles the world had ever known, but that the American soldiery were the first he had ever seen who did not know when they were whipped, and that they would even fight till they tired out the enemy and gained the victory.

Rattlesnakes.—We are informed that recently whilst Mr. D. Mattingly and wife where on a whortleberry excursion near sung Run in the Allegany Glades, in this county, they killed eighty at one time, and wounded four that escaped. This is pretty well, considering, too, that a lady, should have participated in the fun of snake killing. She must be admitted to possess less fear than is usually attributed to her sex. The very dry and hot season; we are told, is supposed to be the cause of so many making their appearance during the summer and fall.

No Rain Yet.—The autumnal equinox passed off with a sprinkle of rain on the 21st and a gale of wind on the 22d. The dry weather (it can hardly be called a drought) may therefore be said still to continue. Vegetation in our fertile soil has however been but slightly affected by it. The corn crop will be one of the most abundant ever raised. The potatoe crop only will be lessened. To speak minutely, eight or nine hills ordinarily in good prairie, yield a bushel. This year it will take eleven or twelve.—Peoria Reg. Sept. 30.

Served him right.—One hundred dollars damages were lately recovered in the Superior Court of Connecticut, by a Mr. Kingsbury, against Hezekiah Allen, for selling the plaintiff a quarter of unsound and unwholesome beef—knowing the animal to be diseased when it was killed.

The Boston Mercantile Journal says the U. S. ship of the line Ohio is ready for sea and will sail in a few days for New York, under the command of Capt. Smith.

"From whence the phrase—'learn to die,'—I perceive that people succeed very well the first time," said a young lady.

Mr. Rothschild, an English banker, has purchased leaving £21,000,000 worth of landed and other property at his disposal. The stamp on the probate of his will was $15,000, and the next stamp will be £30,000 more. Think of a duty to Government of £45,000 on one million!

Valuable cargo.—The whale ship Vermont, of Poughkeepsie, arrived at New York on Tuesday week last, in 125 days from New Zealand, having on board 2600 barrels of whale oil, 200 of sperm and 28,000 pounds of whalebone. This cargo is estimated to be worth $30,000, and is the produce of a voyage of only 14 months and 10 days.

The Constitution of the United States contains the following clause, worthy to be put in letters of gold and hung up in every dwelling in the Union:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an Establishment of Religion, or Abridging the Freedom of Speech, or of the Press; or the right of the people peacably to assemble; and to petition for a Redress of Grievances."

A man was recently fined five pounds in England, for walking on a rail road: that being a trespass by the law. The trespasser is punished both for carelessly endangering his own life and for the risk of throwing a train off the track and endangering the lives of others.

So strict an eye is kept over the movements of foreigners in France, that an American, having lately forgotten his lodgings, was obliged to go to the police office to obtain the necessary information, when, to his great surprise, he was told who he was, where he lodged, and where he had taken on his dinner.

Lord Durham will leave Quebec or N. York and Washington on the 27th inst. when Sir John Colborne as commander of the troops, will assume the Government of Lower Canada. His secretary is to embark for England in November on board the frigate Inconstant, which comes round from the St. Lawrence to receive him.

The engine and car-house of the Carrollton Rail road, at Carrollton (New Orleans) was destroyed on the 7th inst, together with 15 cars and one locomotive Lost estimated at $200,000, of which about $150,000 was insured.

If ladies young and ladies older.
Should fancy they've a handsome shoulder,
And thinking men love fair complexion
Should keep them bare for their inspection—
Say—are they modest ones?

Postscript.—"Bring us no more reports." —From Trenton, we learn that the highest candidate on the Van Buren Congressional ticket is elected by a majority of 65, and the lowest by a majority of 19 votes! "Peaceably, if you can—Force-ably if you must." Somerset and Morris "Honey and Mustard! Oh!—Rahway Her.

The Vermont Watchman, a political paper at Montpelier, Vt. but Anti-Slavery in its bearings, was recently sent back to its publishers by the Post Master at West Point, Georgia, with an endorsement stating that the functionary considered it an abolition paper and would not del ver it from his office—wherefore the publishers need not send any more. The Postmaster might as well rub his spectacles and look at the Federal Constitution and the instructions of his superiors again, before reading any more papers directed to subscribers, to determine whether their character and objects make them proper for delivery. This is a stretch of constructive power which can never be tolerated without surrendering the entire Liberty of the Press.—Jersey City Adv.

The Jerseyman, (of Morris) says "We are completely used up in this country, wound up in a cocoon, and from what cause? Because our party would not adhere to the true Jacksonian principles, but must be continually experimenting upon Sub treasuries and little state monopolies."

Windy. A Mr. Bellows has recently been lecturing in New York on the mechanical properties of the air. The editor of the American naively remarks that Mr. B.'s has experience in the matter.

Weight of the Human Body.—M. Chausse dried the human body in an oven, the original weight of which was 120 lbs. Hence the solid matter of the body was to water as one tenth, or one tenth. From this it will be seen how great a proportion the fluids of the body bear to the solids.

The Globe says that the loco focos "will die in the last breach," and the N. Y Evening Post says, that they will 'die in the first breach.' So it seems that they expect to die in a pair of breeches. Some of them must make an important addition to their wardrobe first.—Louis. Jou.

Bend the first and third fingers of the hand, and commencing with the thumb, count on—the bent fingers will indicate the months which contain only 30 days.

The Bedouin Arabs outdone.—A few days ago, as a Dutch baker was driving his bread cart over the brick bridge which crosses the Washington Canal near the residence of Mr. Thomas Bingham, his horse became suddenly frightened, and mounted with his fore feet on the side wall, which suddenly giving way, the horse cart, and driver were precipitated into the canal, which is about forty feet below the bridge: and yet wonderful to tell, neither the driver, the horse, nor the cart was in any way injured! After such an exploit as this, will any one pretend to deny that the Dutch are a match for all the world at ground and lofty tumbling.

A Yankee Notion.—An English paper contains under the head of 'New American Patent,' the announcement of a Patent hydrophobia water proof hat, made of the skins of a mad dog warranted not to take water.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

"For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man."—THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The Silk Culture.—This, we are well assured, is very soon to be one of the most important branches of agriculture pursued in the United States. New Jersey encouraged by the generous legislation of our law makers, the last winter, has of late come nobly up to the work. From all parts of the state we hear of extensive preparations going on for raising the mulberry trees, or making silk. We are extremely glad to be able to state such favorable prospects for the silk culture—for we have long earnestly desired the time to come when we as a nation should no longer be obliged to export annually, millions of dollars for silk, which we could ourselves manufacture with as much facility as any nation. The time is now evidently drawing near. Many are engaged in it. As soon as the great profit to be derived from it is known others will engage in it; and it cannot be long before the making of silk will be quite a general business. The risk attending it is not greater than that of ordinary farming operations, and in fact, is not so much so, as respects drought.

We have been favored this week with a copy of a monthly periodical, devoted to the silk culture, entitled the "Silk Grower." It is published in Philadelphia, and edited by Ward & Chesney, of Burlington, in this state, where this business is carried on very extensively. We found it a very interesting publication, well printed and conducted with talent,—well worth the price charged, $1 per annum. Any person wishing light on this interesting subject, would do well to take it. We have room only for this extract:

A proper clime and a suitable range of temperature are decidedly necessary for the production of good silk. The excessive heat, and the great humidity of certain countries, exert the same effect upon the silk worm as upon the constitution and habits of the inhabitants.—England will never be able to raise the raw material for her manufactures, owing to the great moisture of her climate; and her sole dependance for the supply of her manufactories, will, and must be, upon foreign countries. Possessing the capital that she does, combined with the energy, skill, and perseverence of her artizans, is it not probable that she will import the raw material from that country which will afford it the cheapest? She has long been dependant upon the United States for her cotton, and her profits have been immense Her merchants and manufacturers are justly styled Princes of the Earth. When she ascertains that our country can furnish her with raw silk proportionate to her demand, and at a cheaper price than she can obtain it from any other source, it is natural to suppose that our silk growers will always find a market for the products of their labor in her ports.

It has been satisfactorily proved that the United States can produce silk superior in quality to that produced by any nation whatever. With a climate neither too humid or warm, but exactly suited to the disposition and habits of the silk worm, we must eventually become as famous for our exportation of our raw silk as we are for our cotton. All that is wanted on our part, is a determination to "GO AHEAD," and in a few years we shall be ranked first upon the list of silk growing nations.

But to return to come, we care not for a foreign market; our immense population, by its demands for the fabric, will cause all the raw material to be worked up within our own borders. We shall no longer look to China, France or Italy for manufactured silk, and shall be as independent of them in that respect, as we are in regard to cotton—why then should we delay? Every thing appears favourable, and invites us to the enterprize.

Dr. Pascalis gives the following reasons why our agricultural brethren should engage in the silk business;—

1st. The article of silk added to the other pursuites of agriculture, the more enhances the value of land, that by it, such parcels as are poor and waste can be profitably employed.

2d. Said produce or staple of standard value, according to its quality, is always exchangeable in commerce in all its several conditions, as it is neither perishable nor corruptible.

3d. It is a material for the manufacture of all kinds of filature, for raw silk, of machinery for weaving warping; for building a variety of looms, bringing into use every process of dying, &c. which business being divided and subdivided, affords numerous Branches of mechanical industry by which immense populations in Europe are now prosperously supported.

4th. Nurseries of silk worms create also various branches of business among the poorer classes; The making of hurdles, frames, baskets &c. gathering mulberry leaves, and brushwood detaching and cleaning cocoons, and many other sorts of employment incident on the management and completion of the culture, as if every individual of the poorest community could not fail reaping from it some advantage and profit.

The Farmer's Cabinet.—This monthly has very much improved since the commencement of the third volume in August last. Every number is worth more to the farmer who will attend to its precepts than the cost of a volume. We should be pleased to obtain some ten or a dozen subscribers to it, in this vicinity, to aid the worthy proprietor in his praiseworthy undertaking, to commence with the present volume. For terms, and advertising in this paper. Specimen numbers can be seen at this office.

The Knickerbocker.—We have had the reading of this Monthly, for several months past.—We find it much improved of late. It is vastly superior to what it was one little year ago. In long articles of a higher and more serious cast, —to which monthly magazines are more adapted,—it is superior to the Mirror. But taken as a whole we much prefer the Mirror. The Mirror contains more reading, has elegant and common engravings, and, what is of the most importance, in the talent generally exhibited in its pages, it is fully equal if not superior to any journal of the kind this side of the Atlantic.

The Rahway Herald thus notices our remarks made some two weeks since, respecting the need of legs to make good Sub-Treasurers:

No need of legs, indeed! On what did all the "good sub-treasurers," already eloped, run on? Not on their heads, surely, Mr. Union. We believe that the most important ball given by a sub-treasurer, is "leg-ball."

Leg-ball, is but a poor kind of ball, and were we as well assured as you are, that it would be the best we could obtain from sub-treasurers, we, of course would go against the whole system. We shall probably have an opportunity of testing the question in a year or two,—for as the elections are going now-a-days, the prospects are very strong, that the Sub-treasury scheme will become ere long the law of the land.

Late Elections.

New Jersey.

Official Results.—COMPLETE RETURNS.

The Newark Daily Advertiser of Friday evening last furnishes us with complete official returns of the late election in this state for members of Congress, as follows:

Vroom,	28,492
Cooper,	28,455
Dickerson,	28,453
Ryall,	28,441
Kille,	28,426
Randolph,	28,426
Stratton,	28,395
Maxwell,	28,383
Halsted,	28,337
Yorke,	28,321
Force,	28,315
Ayerigg,	28,295

The following are therefore elected:

Administration.

Peter D. Vroom, of Somerset,
Daniel B. Ryall, of Monmouth,
William R. Cooper, of Gloucester,
Joseph Kille, of Salem.
Philomon Dickerson, of Passaic county,

Whig.

Joseph F. Randolph, Monmouth,

The following are the average majorities from each county.

	Whig	Administration
Essex	1562
Morris	322
Somerset	154
Mercer	283
Middlesex	167
Burlington	523
Bergen		225
Passaic	251
Gloucester	517
Salem		52
Cumberland		30
Cape May	236
Sussex		1635
Warren		864
Hunterdon		916
Atlantic		162
Monmouth		230
	4045	4116
		4045

Administration majority, 71

Whole number of votes about 57,000—average Van Buren majority, 71. A year ago the whole number of votes was 52,872.—whig majority, 1,374. Increase of votes in one year, 4,125! Van Buren gain, 1,444.

The whigs polled last year,	27,123	votes.
This year,	28,362
Increase,	1,239
The V. B.'s polled last year,	25,749	votes.
This year,	28,433
Increase,	2,684

Essex County.—The highest vote on the whig ticket for Congress was Randolph and Maxwell, each, 4052. The highest on the administration do. was Vroom, 2500. The highest on the whig ticket for Assembly was Wm. Stiles, and A. V. Spicer, each, 4045. The highest on the administration do. was Jacob Manning 2405.

Whig majority in this county, 1562.—In 1836 it was 931. Whig gain, 641.

Georgia.

The State Rights party (Whig) have elected their entire delegation to Congress, 9 members, in opposition to the Union, or Administration party, by a small majority. In the state Legislature, there will probably be a majority of two in the senate, and four in the lower house, of the State rights party. The administration papers as that many of the State rights party are sub-treasury, or, Van Buren men.

In the last Congress, the administration had 8, to 1 whig, from this state.

South Carolina.

As has long been expected South Carolina has gone for the administration. Eight of the nine members of Congress chosen this fall are sub-treasury men. Mr. Legare, the talented member of the opposition, has lost his election by 500 votes; and is succeeded by a sub-treasury man.

In the last congress, South Carolina had seven whigs and two administration.

Pennsylvania.

Mr. Porter, the Administration candidate for Governor, has been elected by about 9000 majority. The whigs have a majority in both branches of the State legislature. Of the 25 members to Congress, the administration has 18 and the whigs 10.

According to the Journal of Commerce, the last Pennsylvania delegation to Congress was 17 administration, to 11 whigs.

Ohio.

Has also changed her Governor Returns from 51 counties show a majority of 6,382 for Shannon, the administration candidate, over Vance, the whig candidate, and former governor. We have not received sufficient returns to determine how the state legislature will stand.

The last delegation to Congress was 11 whigs to 8 V. B. men. In the next congress, as near as we can judge, it will stand 7 whigs to 12 V. B. men.

Arkansas has elected an Administration Representative to Congress, as before.

Important!—The official returns of the election in this state, given in another column are correct; but it is said, that the returns from one two or three towns will be rejected, all of which give a Van Buren majority. If either of these towns should be rejected it would materially alter the result—and if all three are rejected, the whole whig ticket will be elected.

Supposing that the returns of neither of these towns are rejected, the result thus far, from all the states which have elected members to the next Congress is as follows:

Eleven states have elected 92 members; of whom in the last Congress 49 were for the Administration, and 43 were whigs—In the next Congress, 55 are for the administration, and 37 are whigs. Administration gain, 6.

If New Jersey should return 6 whigs the result would be much the same as before—the whig gain in Georgia ballancing their loss in South Carolina and Ohio.

In November, four states elect 54 more members, and the remaining eleven states elect the remaining 96 members in 1839.

In the last congress, as elected, the administration had a majority of 10.

This day the Governor and Council meet at Trenton, to count the votes of this state for Congressmen, after which we shall know with certainty who form our delegation to Congress. Our legislature also meet this day.

Texian Expedition.—We learn from the New Orleans Picayune that a company of capitalists have associated themselves together to form an expedition, to start ere long for the country lying on the western declivity of the chain of the Rocky mountains, towards the Pacific Ocean.

The main object of this company is to establish a road for waggons from Galveston island, through Chihuahua, to Monterey, a town of that name, situated on the upper part of the Gulf of California. In this pioneering expedition, which is expected to be merely the presage of more extensive operations hereafter, it is in contemplation to take along forty to fifty thousand dollars worth of goods; and, as there will be two hundred and fifty men in the company well armed and equipped, it is to be presumed that the caravan will proceed to its destination without much molestation from robbers banditti, &c.

The leader is to be Major A. Le Grand, of Texas, who is extensively known throughout the country to be traversed by the caravan. It is calculated that the company will be gone till about the commencement of next summer.

Westward Ho!—A fleet of some nine steamboats left our harbor this morning and in the course of the day, for the far west, bearing from the whirves at least fifteen hundred passengers, in the space of one day; has a population sufficient to create a respectable sized village, been removed from among us, and yet we do not miss them. They come among us, stay perhaps a week and depart, without increasing or diminishing our population perceptibly. It would seem that the whole world is on the move, and passing and repassing through our city. By the way our harbor is to small by one half for the increasing commerce of the Lakes—especially at such a time as this, when the wind down the lake has prevented departures for some days, and at the same time been filling its with arrivals. The guardians of Buffalo and its interests must become active in an enterprize so desirable and in fact so essential to its future prosperity.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

Sore Throat.—A writer in the Mercantile Journal recommends the daily use of cold water as a preventive against the sore throat. It should be thoroughly applied by a sponge to the region of the throat and breast, and persevered in regularly every day. If this be done there is no doubt of its efficacy.

Division in the Albany Synod.—The Synod of Albany met on Tuesday the 9th inst. at Hudson One hundred and eighty members were enrolled. Some others afterwards appeared, making the whole number 212. Immediately after the roll was completed, a resolution was offered, expressing an adherence to the assembly that met in the seventh church, Philadelphia, (the old school.) Another was made to lay this on the table, and the vote was,

Ayes	75
Noes	20
non liquet about	13

The mover then stated that it was evident a division must take place, and that in anticipation of this, a room in the same church has been procured, and he requested the minority to withdraw to that room. The whole body then united in prayer. Those that withdrew, including those that subsequently enrolled their names with them amounted to 36, who organized as a synod—Those that remained and acted with the old Synod numbered upwards of 60, and 10 or 15 declined acting at present.

Some of these are waiting the result of the law suits in November next. Nothing unkind was said or done. The division seemed the result of an honest difference of opinion.—Albany Evening Journal.

From the Cherokee Country.—Letter received in Norfolk from Athens, Tennessee, the present head quarters of Gen. Scott, dated Oct. 3d, state that the excessive drought had prevented the emigration of the Indians as contemplated, the rivers being low, and there not being water enough to sustain the Indians and their cattle. The emigration was thus retarded one month, but to our advices, showers of rain had fallen, and one thousand Indians were to have departed on the 2d to the Far West. At short intervals parties of 1000 each would follow suit, and it is probable, that, at this time, all the Indians are on their way westward, except the deercepid and sick, who will remain until the river becomes navigable.

St. Louis, it would appear by its papers flourishes apace. The Bulletin says more buildings have been commenced this year, than at any former period. The Bank of the state of Missouri is extending its discounts upon a very liberal scale and as it is gaining upon the confidence of the people, it will in a short time do much for the trade and, commerce of the country.

Salaries of the Governor's of States.—That of the Governor of Louisiana, is $7,500; of the Governors of New York and Pennsylvania 4000, of Massachusetts, 3,666; South Carolina, 3500; of Virginia, 3,333; of Georgia, 3000; of Maryland, 2,666; of Mississippi and Kentucky, 2,500; of New Jersey, North Carolina, Alabama and Tennessee, 2,000 each; Maine and Missouri, 1500 each; Delaware, 1333; Ohio 1200; Connecticut, 1100; New-Hampshire, 100; Indiana, 1000; Illinois, 1000; Vermont, 750; Rhode Island, 400.

It is reported that snow has fallen to the depth of six inches in the mountains between Wheeling and Baltimore.

The great and leading measure of the age; It rests upon the imperishable foundation of truth, and though it may be defeated at first, its final triumph, if supported with energy and perseverence is certain.—Calhoun's last toast.

In Iowa, at a recent ball there were 50 gentlemen, and six ladies present. This was at a town called "Blue Ruin."

Rahway, Aug. 1st 1838.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and every care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ess and impartiality, but without harshness. Its c ief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest.

The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is give, without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

New Cheap Grocery & Shoe Store.

THE Subscriber having just opened a new Store at the House of Samuel L. Pound in Plainfield, on the corner of Main street and Bowery lane, opposite Peace Graves, where he will be happy to accommodate his friends and the public with the following articles, namely, Molasses, Sugar Tea, Coffee, Rice, Pepper, Ginger, Spice, Cocoa, Chocolate, Cinnamon, Sal Æratus, Mackerel, Herring, Herring, Soap, Candles, salt, the best of western Flour. Gentlemen's and Boy's Boots and Shoes of all kinds.

Also, a good assortment of Ladies' shoes, and many other articles too tedious to mention, all of which may be had cheap for cash or country produce.

Please not ask for trust, these times.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the sets will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and prominent doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate the manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a goodly pearl, which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—this well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

The Farmer's Cabinet,

THE CABINET is published on the 1st and the 15th of every month. Each number will contain 32 octavo pages on good paper and fair type. The subjects will be illustrated by engravings on wood when ever they can be appropriately introduced.

TERMS.—One dollar per year, payable in advance. The Cabinet, by the decision of the Post Master general, is subject only to Newspaper postage, that is one cent each hundred within the state, and within 100 miles out of the state—one cent and a half cent each hundred to any other part of the States.

☞ Seven copies for five dollars.

☞ All letters must begin with the volume, No. 1 or half volume, No. 6.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Common Fevers, Jaundice, Affection of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever-Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, &c. &c. and they are found to be the most valuable remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE
Mr. Joseph Hawley, Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I was induced to purchase them; are for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the benefit that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and cautiously and fairly believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, first if resorted to in season, they might save much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended, especially for sick sides worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not create any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dyspepsia, they are a sure and effectual remedy.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, when a portentous conflict upon whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of nearly 200,000 persons, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, with this Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our cause to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the purest intelligence, and the most interesting information, connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, will be supplied to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

WILLIAM HILL.

Plainfield, May 1st, 1838.

JUST RECEIVED, a new Assortment of Children's Shoes. 85c. and 75. G. FOX POUND.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE
New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved, from original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of original poetry and imaginative music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this purpose—interesting notices upon the various productions of fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engraving, music, &c.—notices of the drama, opera, and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous matter relative to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Willis, Cox, Captain Marryat, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of unbounded others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its muslick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, full of not superiour, to its predecessors: and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it in light, graceful, and agreeable readings of elegantliterature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle Ladies, wayworn with the de l ded cares, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most fastidious maiden of 16, it will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each, and every one so engraved Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the Carriers to all subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

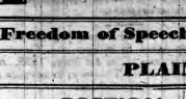
POETICAL.



From the Knickerbocker.

'There is one God.'

What speaks the thunder, when its midnight fury
Rolls through Heaven's vast and cloudy palaces!
What wills the lightning on the ebon sky,
When the fierce tempests, wrapt in awe, ride rise
From their huge cradles on the mountain tops!
What about the gaunt and timeless sky sees,
That tom right royally their arms on high,
When from the hills the cold north-western gale
Calls to the torrent in the misty vale,
And the air rings with Heaven's artillery!
'There is One God!' to Him they lift their prayer,
He framed them temples, and they worship there—
Storm, wind, and howling thunder! Go, vain man,
And think their mighty creed a false one, if you can!

Utica, Aug. 1838. H. W. R.

Yes or No.

When of a man I ask a question,
I wish he'd answer "Yes" or "No,"
Nor stop to make some smooth evasion,
And only tell me "May be so."

I always doubt the friendly meaning—
"O well, perhaps, I do not know,"
When, for a favor I am suing;
I'd rather hear the answer "No."

When of a friend I wish to borrow
A little cash, to bear him say,
"I've just no cash—but on to-morrow"—
Is worse than if he told me "Nay."

Why all this need of plastering over
What we in fact intend to show?
Why not at once, with much less labor,
Say frankly, 'Yes, my friend, or No.'

From my soul despise all quibbling,
I'll use it not with friend or foe;
But when they ask, without dissembling,
I'll plainly answer 'Yes or No!'

And when I ask that trembling question,
"Will you be mine, my dearest Miss?"
Then may there be no hesitation
To say distinctly 'Yes, sir—yes!'

MISCELLANEOUS.

Enchanted Mountain.—The following account of a natural curiosity is from the Texas Telegraph:

This singular mountain is situated on the head waters of the Salley—a tributary of the Colorado about eighty miles from Bastrop, is a northwestedly direction. It is about 300 feet high, and appears to be an enormous oval roof partly embedded in the earth. When the sun shines, the light is reflected from its polished surface as from a mirror, and the whole mountain glows with such dazzling radiance, that the beholder who views steven from the distance of 4 or 5 miles is unable to gaze upon it without experiencing a painful sensation, similar to that experienced when looking upon the rising sun. The ascent of this hill is so very gradual, that persons can easily walk up to the top; but the rock is so smooth and slippery that those who make the attempt are compelled to wear mocasons or stockings instead of shoes. The ascent, together with the name of the place, Holy Mountain, formed the visitor very morality of the command made to Moses at Mount Horeb, 'Put off thy shoes from off my feet.' The Comanches regard it a hill with veneration, and Indian pilgrims frequently assemble, to perform their Payman rites upon its summit.

Sagacity of the Horse.—The horse possesses a sagacity nothing his way home from a considerable distance. Some dozen years have rolled over my head since I met my friend, Mr. Robert Gill of Richmond, Yorkshire, at the little town of Bowes, where we mounted each a pony for the purpose of proceeding to Wear-head, intending to shoot on the Durham moors the following day (the 12th of August) There being no direct cart road, in our progress we traversed a considerable quantity of moorland, threaded each number of lanes, and at length, after much misery, at twilight found ourselves on the border of an extensive common, intersected by numerous sheep walks, over which, however it was necessary for us to pass. The night did not become pitch dark; but we were enabled to discern the summit of a mountain; (pointed out to us by a shepherd,) which served as a beacon to guide our way.—We reached our quarters at twelve o'clock. After spending a week in Weardale and amongst the mountains which surround it, we began to retrace our steps. Strangers to the way whenever we were in doubt I wrongly advised leaving the decision to our ponies; and they did no deceive us in a single instance. However, upon one occasion, two lanes were presented the ponies leaned to the left, when my friend insisted they must be wrong. We, therefore, compelled the animals to take the right, which they did very unwillingly. After proceeding half a mile, we discovered our mistake; we returned and did not afterwards oppose the will of our sagacious nags. Those animals had been in this part of the country at any prior period; but, having once proceeded, for something more than thirty miles, through a very intricate country, having crossed moorlands, numerously intersected with sheep walks, they were enabled unerringly, to find their way back, and that without the least difficulty. The dog possesses this faculty in still greater perfection: indeed, it may be said to be general amongst quadrupeds, in which respect they are superior to man.—Physiological Observations on Mental Susceptibility, by T. B. Johnson.

New Way to detect a thief.—The father of the great American statesman, [Mr. Webster,] was a very humorous, as well as sensible man. Innumerable are the anecdotes that are related of him. As he was once journeying in Massachusetts, and far from his native town, he stopped rather late one night at an inn in the bar room were about twenty different individuals, who as he entered, called out for him to discover a thief. One of the company, it appeared, had a watch taken from his pocket, and he knew the offender must be in the room with them.

'Come Mr. Lawmaker, you know the signs of the times, be hidden things of the season, tell who is the thief!'

'Perhaps all the doors in the room, and let no one leave it; and then landlord go and bring your wife's brass kettle.'

'Why—ew! want to know? my stars! my wife's—wh—sa!' quoth boniface.

'Why you wouldn't be more struck up if I told you to get a pot.'

Boniface did as commanded. The great brass kettle was placed in the middle of the floor, bottom up, as black and sooty as the chimney back. The landlord got into his bar and looked on with eyes as big as saucers.

'You don't want any hot water or nothing, to take off the shades of no critter, do you squire?' said the landlord, the preparations looking a little too much like scalding—'the old woman has gone to bed, and the well's dry.'

'Now go to the barn and bring the biggest cockerell you've got.'

Why!—you wont bite him, will ye—he's a tough one.'

'I'll answer squire, he didn't steal the watch. The cock-rooster knows when to crow, without looking at a watch.'

'Go ahead—I want detect the thief.'

Boniface went to the barn and soon returned with a treasure, a great rooster, cackling all the while like mad.

'Now pass under the kettle, and blow out the light.'

'Now gentlemen, I don't suppose the thief is in the room—but if he is, the old rooster will crow when the chance touches the bottom of the kettle with his beak. Walk round in a circle and the cock will wink known the watch stealer. The innocent need not fear you know.'

The company then, to humor him, and carry out the joke, walked around the kettle in the dark three or four minutes.

'All done, gentlemen?'

'All done!' with the cry, 'where's your crowing, we hear no cockadoodledoo.'

'Bring on the light.'

A light was brought as ordered.

'Now hold out your hands good folks.'

Jim Tucker's hands after another. They were of course black, from coming in contact with the kettle.

'All up!'

'All up!' the response.

'All black!'

'A—ll—right, know, here's one fellow who hasn't been near the hand.'

'A, ha, you old boy, let's take a peep at your paws.'

They were examined, and were not black like the rest of the company.

'You'll find your watch about him—now search.'

And search proved. This fellow not being aware that the rest, of the trap that was set for the discovery of the thief, had kept about from the kettle lest when he touched it the crowing of the rooster should proclaim him as the thief.

At the sight of all the rest were blackened, the wink of one showed of course that he was the stealer. He jumped out of the frying pan into the fire, and was soon lodged in as uncomfortable a place as either, to wit, the jail.

Ocean Demonstration.—We find in an English paper, received by the last arrivals, the following account:

On Sunday week, among the tens of thousands who witnessed the majestic spectacle of the eclipse there was an honest weaver in the neighbouring village who, like many others, is imbued with the laudable desire of giving his children a more extensive education than he enjoyed himself. When the eclipse became annular he exclaimed, 'I wish our John was here. Since after he gaed to astronomy, he used to deceive me about the sun being many thousand of times bigger than the earth; but I've tell'd him he was mistaken. What he would say now to see the sun laid right on the top of the other?' I allow the astronomer, the weaver's neighbour, to have found his error in saying, and gave up, having had the incredible quantity of 3,700 bricks in 5½ hours. Nicholson continued until 12 M.; having laid 5 350 bricks, in 6 hours! which work was performed in the presence of the aqueduct inspectors, subsequently examined by the engineers, and pronounced thoroughly well done.—An average day's work is twelve hundred.—N. Y. paper.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

It may be presumed that a high degree of this character is not attained without a considerable measure of that kind of certainty, with respect to the relations of things, which can be acquired only from experience and observation; though an extreme vigilance in the exercise of observation, and a strong and strongly exerted power of generalizing on experience, may have made a comparatively short time enough to supply a large share of the wisdom derivable from these sources; but a man may be rich in the benefits of experience, and therefore may have all the decision of judgement legitimately founded on that accomplishment, long before he is old. This experimental knowledge he will be able to apply in a direct and immediate manner, and without refining it into general principles, to some situations of affairs, so as to anticipate the consequences of certain actions in those situations as confidently and rationally as the kind of fruit to be produced by a given kind of tree. Thus far the feats of his experience will serve him as precedents. At the next step, he will be able to apply this knowledge, in the form of general principles, to a multitude of cases bearing but a partial resemblance to any thing he has actually witnessed. And then, in looking forward to a combination of circumstances altogether new, if any such thing could happen, he can trust to the resources which he is persuaded his intellect will open to him, or is humbly confident, if he is a devout man, that the supreme intelligence will not suffer to be wanting to him, when the occasion arrives. In proportion as his views include, at all events, more certainties than those of other men, he is less fearful of contingencies. And if, in the course of executing his design, unexpected disastrous events should befal, but which are not owing to any thing wrong in the plan and principles of that design, but to foreign causes; it will be characteristic of a strong mind to attribute those events discriminatively to their own causes and not to the plan, which therefore, instead of being disliked and relinquished, will be still as much approved as before, and the man will proceed calmly to the sequel of it without any change of arrangement;—unless indeed those minister events should be such as to alter the whole state of things to which the plan was correctly adapted, and so to create a necessity, on this account, for an entirely new one to be formed.

Without absolutely despising the understandings of other men, he will perceive their dimensions compared with his own, which will preserve its independence through every communication and every encounter. It is however a part of this very independence, that he will hold himself at liberty to alter his opinion, if the information which may be communicated to him, shall give sufficient reason. And as no one is so sensible of the importance of a complete acquaintance with a subject as the man who answers and endeavors to think conclusively, he will listen with the utmost attention to the information, which may be received, sometimes from persons for whose understanding he has no great respect. Counsel will in general have so much weight with him as it supplies knowledge which may assist his judgement; he will yield nothing to it as authority; but he may hear it with more candor and good temper, from the absence of this latter dependence of his judgement, than the man who is afraid lest the first person that begins to persuade him, should confound his determination. He feels it entirely a work of his own to deliberate and to resolve, amidst all the advice which may be at tempting to control him. If, with an assurance of his intellect being of the highest order, he also holds a commanding station, he will feel it gratuitous to consult with any one, excepting merely to receive statements of facts. This appears to be exemplified in the man, who has lately set on the nations of Europe how large a portion of the world may, when heaven permits, be at the mercy of the solitary workings of an individual mind.

The strongest trial of this determined style of judgement is in those cases of urgency where something must immediately be done, and where the consequences of deciding right and wrong are of great importance: as in the office of a medical man in treating a patient whose situation while it renders some strong means indispensable, renders it extremely doubtful which ought to be selected. A still stronger illustration is the case of a general who is compelled, in the very instant to make dispositions on which the event of a battle, the lives of ten thousand of his men, or perhaps the fate of a nation may depend. He may even be reduced to choose between two dreadful expedients. Such a dilemma is described in Denon's account of one of the sanguinary conflicts between the French and Mamelukes, as having for a while held Dessaix, though a very decisive commander, in a state of anguish.

A bricklaying match came off last Friday, on a section of the Croton Water works, between R. H. Nicholson, of Hartford, Ct. aged 21, and G. W. Neagle, of Philadelphia, aged 19. The parties commenced their labor at 6 o'clock in the morning, on the rising arch of the aqueduct, a at half past 5 P. M. Neagle seeing that Nicholson found his strength failing, and gave up, having laid the incredible quantity of 3,700 bricks in 5½ hours. Nicholson continued until 12 M.; having laid 5 350 bricks, in 6 hours! which work was performed in the presence of the aqueduct inspectors, subsequently examined by the engineers, and pronounced thoroughly well done.—An average day's work is twelve hundred.—N. Y. paper.

HUSBANDRY.

From the Farmer's Cabinet.

Kennett Square, 8th mo. 19th. 1838.

Respected Friend,—

The communication I received this day, dated 21st of 8th mo. last, desiring information relative to keeping sheep during the hot season of the year. The sheep that I tried the experiment on were full merino. In the forepart of 6th mo. 1835, I confined about 80 of those, including ewes, lambs and wethers, under a well ventilated shed for nine weeks, except about two hours in the morning and evening I let them run at large in an adjoining lot to get water and exercise themselves. In 1836 and '7 I kept 70 under the same shed for 12 or 13 weeks each summer during the hot season, feeding them three times per day, principally on clover grass cut in the morning while the dew was on. Every 8 or 10 days I had their pen covered about one inch thick with loam and on that a good littering of straw; this with the remnant of grass the sheep left was spread over at each feeding and kept them clear The loam was put over for the purpose of sweetening the pen and to prevent heating so as to injure the sheep, as well as to increase the manure by absorbing the urine, &c. Those sheep were not designed for the butcher, although some of them became very fat, and I have reason to believe that sheep will feed in a shorter time in the hot season of the year if rightly cared for in this way, than to run at large, for in warm days they lay in the shade feeding only morning and evening, but under a cool shed they will feed freely at any time through the hottest day.

Those sheep attended as above described for 12 weeks, made 30 large ox cart loads of as good manure as any produced by horses or cattle which I consider fully compensate for the trouble.

One acre of good ground with red clover kept the above sheep 13 weeks last summer, and kept them well. This acre we mowed once and about two thirds over the second time; the remainder going to seed, I let them run at large. I am satisfied that two acres of grass equally as good would not keep the same number of sheep for the same length of time, as they destroy as much grass with their feet as they eat. The sheep were more healthy, less subject to scour when kept in, than when they were out in the hot sun, heavy dews and rain; producing as much wool of quite as good quality, as well as more secure from the depredations of the dogs. Very respectfully thy friend,

MOSES PENNOCK.

From the Jersey City Advertiser.

Silk Culture.—Much attention is given to the culture of the Silk Worm in various parts of New Jersey. In Monmouth county, it would appear by the Inquirer, that the people generally are about to engage in it. Particular mention is made of the economy of Mr. D. M'Lean, and it is added—

"During the last ten days, our village has been almost daily thronged with purchasers, already more than $15,000 have been realized in the sale of Trees in this place. The price of Trees, we are informed by both holders and buyers, is daily advancing, and the present prospect is, that by one month there will not be a tree for sale in the county of Monmouth. The profits which some of our citizens and villages have realized, are so great as to be almost incredible. One individual last spring, invested in trees $100 50, and a few days since sold them for the snug little sum of $3,000. Another invested $400 and has already sold to the amount of $3,000, and retained a considerable number of his Trees as stock for the next season. Our sales have been made from $1,000 to $6,000, affording to the growers profits almost as great as the above.

The raising of the mulbery has proved a profitable business every where, such is the general desire of farmers north and west to engage in the silk business. In the town of Flushing, Long Island, where Prince and Bloodgood, at their famous gardens, have cultivated large nurseries, the sales have been this year some $30,000, on which a profit of perhaps $20,000 has been realized. Three young ladies, sisters, in the same township, have, we hear, cleared $8000 by the silk manufactured within their own domicil from worms raised by their care.

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

Our Water Works, and Water Power.—If any thing were wanting to confirm our already confident impressions of the exceeding value and importance of our Buffalo water power, as an indispensable adjunct to our commerce, and as the crowning accomplishment to our position, for the entire control of the trade of the great west, the present season has afforded it. On all sides do we hear loud complaints of the difficulty in getting the wheat crops of the country floured. In the great western states, scarcely a mill is in operation. To the east, at Rochester, we hear that only a small portion of the mills are running: and the following article from the Baltimore American, shows that at the south they are equally unfortunate;

The Alexandria Gazette states that the mills in that neighborhood are lying idle for the want of water. The streams about Baltimore are also very low, by reason of the long drought, and the city millers are constantly unable to do more than a third or a fourth of their usual grinding. At Richmond, in consequence of the repairs to the canal, we believe there is but a single flour mill in a operation, which turns out about 400 barrels daily.

In the midst of the universal drought, our

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, October 30, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man.
THOMAS JEFFERSON.

We are pained to learn that a young daughter of Mr. Benjamin LaForge, of New Market, was burned to death, by her clothes taking fire, on Sunday morning, the 21st inst.

By the election returns from Ohio, we perceive that both Wm. K. Bond, and A. Duncan are re-elected to Congress—but both by greatly diminished majorities.

As we expected.—The Southern Commercial Convention, which met at Augusta, the 18th inst. was attended by only seven persons from South Carolina, and nine from Georgia!

It appears from the Jacksonville papers, that Mr. Prentiss, member of Congress from Mississippi, declines a re-election on account of his private affairs.

The Newark Daily, of Tuesday last, in commenting upon the last number of the "Christian Review," a Baptist quarterly periodical, published in Boston, gives a list of the contents. The subject of the 4th article we observe is "Immorality of the soul." A queer theme, or rather a queer mistake. Perhaps, however, the author under that title is discussing the subject of total depravity.

FOREIGN.

By the packet ship Hibernia, which arrived a New York, last week, eight days later news is received than by the Royal William. The political news is not of much consequence. The weather had been favorable for harvesting, and most of the crops had been secured in good order,—in consequence of which, the price of grain had fallen, and the duties on it had advanced 2s. and 8d per quarter, and were expected very soon to be up to 10s. 8d. and on flour, 6s. 5d. per barrel. Great complaints are made against the grain laws.

A new steam ship, the Liverpool, was advertised to leave Liverpool, for New York, on her first voyage, on Saturday, Oct. 20. She will probably be in New York next week.

A line of steam packets is soon to be established between Havre and New York, consisting of four steam vessels, of 1800 tons each.

Steamers are also upon the Euphrates and Tigris, in Persia, as appears from the following:

Accounts from Bagdad state the Euphrates steamer had entered the canal near Telugu, below Hit, and proceeded across the flooded marshes, had come out into the Tigris about a mile below Bagdad, and having from thence again descended the river to Bussorah to procure a fresh crew from India, had returned to Bagdad with Captain Lynch, who was ill at that place.

The Iron Trade.—In consequence of the great quantity of orders received from the United states by the leading houses in the trade, iron has already advanced 10s. per ton; and from the prospect which is held out, that the present heavy demand for iron rails will be immediately succeeded by others of similar magnitude, it is now confidently calculated upon that an additional 10s. will be maintained at the next quarterly meeting of the iron masters in the Staffordshire and Shropshire districts.—Birmingham Adv.

Tremendous Waterspout.—On Wednesday morning about 5 o'clock, the village and neighborhood of Kingsconn, county of Cavan, to the extent of 4 or 5 square miles, was visited for upwards of 6 hours by a tremendous water spout, the most destructive in its consequences ever witnessed in this part of the country. The village, being situated on the side of a mountain, with much difficulty resisted the overpowering torrent, which rolled from the heights with accumulated power; several houses were suddenly deserted by the inhabitants, and left a prey to the devouring element. Cornmixen, the seat of Mr. F. Frank, was so completely and so suddenly overwhelmed, that 20 men were required, knee deep in the water, to keep out the flood from the parlor and drawing room. The greatest loss, however, on this melancholy occasion was sustained by the poor people, whose flax, hay and corn, were indiscriminately borne down by the torrent a distance of several miles, and swept into one common mass into the Lake of Ballyho.—Dublin Paper.

The celebrated Indian chief, Black Hawk, died at his camp, on the river Des Moins, on the 3d inst. aged 73 years.

Among the recent deaths in the New York state prison at Sing Sing, is that of Walter F. Osgood, late a lawyer of New York city, of the most respectable connections. He died in prison of diarrhœa, on the 17th. He was sentenced for 14 years for forging pension certificates.—His fate says in language not to be disregarded, "Abstain from wickedness."

Worthy of Imitation.—A fatal duel was lately fought near Wimbleton, in England. The seconds have all been tried and found guilty of premeditated murder. A few such examples in this country, would do much in suppressing duelling.

Erie to draw upon, are in brisk operation, and turning out upwards of 700 barrels of flour daily. Our millers are constantly receiving propositions from Ohio, and elsewhere, to flour wheat on shares, at almost their own terms, so anxious are the holders of wheat to improve the present high rates of the flour market. Were there fifty runs of mill stones in operation at this point, they could be constantly supplied with Ohio wheat. One of the mills at Black Rock, we learn from good authority is actually clearing upon its flour, upwards of one thousand dollars a day! More than enough to pay for its entire construction, the present season.

Such a water power and an extensive as it is at this point, must be invaluable. Already it is beginning to be sought after by foreign millers and capitalists; and we learn that some four or five additional flouring mills, of the largest class are to be built in readiness for the next wheat crop. The Canal Commissioners are putting the Black Rock pier in the most permanent and durable condition, and we feel confident that our water power, and its convenient approach, will hereafter be in no jeopardy from the elements.

Wheat has already, at Rochester been up to $2 a bushel. A fleet of our largest, schooners, with about ninety thousand bushels, now lie in Black Rock harbor, unloading at the mills. And upwards of 200,000 bushels will have been ground and shipped, in flour to New York, before the season closes. Besides this, more than 700,000 bushels have gone forward, through Buffalo to the mills east of us, for grinding—which, for want of mills here, we have lost the flouring—a sacrifice no great for our abundant water power to sustain.

The extraordinary facility with which this branch of business is dispatched, may be thus illustrated; a few days since, a schooner, loaded with six thousand bushels of wheat, arrived at Kingham and Lurlee's mill in the afternoon. The discharge of the cargo was forthwith commenced, and at the next day, 300 barrels of flour manufactured from that cargo, were on their way to Albany! Such is the facility of our inexhaustible water power for the wheat manufacture of the west. And already has it seized the attention of some of the Rochester millers, who propose erecting flouring mills at Black Rock next season. They freely acknowledge that the difference in flouring western wheat for the New York market, is fully thirty cents a barrel in favor of our place.

Curious Typographical Error.—The celebrated printer Henri Ettine, son of Robert, (both known in the learned world by the name of Stephanus,) was once engaged in the printing of a splendid quarto Missal. The great number of subscribers seemed likely to make ample compensation for the heavy expense required by the undertaking. After the sheets had been corrected with the utmost care, the work was printed off splendidly bound, and delivered to the subscribers. It would be impossible to describe the astonishment of the learned printer, when one copy after another was returned to him, till all was sent back. He enquired the reason of this extraordinary circumstance, and was informed that in one place the compositor had put Ices le petre cleres au cullotte, (here the priest will take off his breeches,) instead of calotte (small black cap,) and the error escaped the correctors of the press. In vain did the poor printer offer to make a new set: the subscribers who were almost all ecclesiastics, positively refused to take the work on any terms. This unfortunate affair is said to have been the first and chief cause of the derangement which afterwards caused Henri Ettiene to be confined in the Lunatic hospital at Lyons where he died in 1690. There is a copy of the Missal with this unlucky error, in the Royal Library' at Paris.

The Book-Making Business.—The following is an extract from a Lecture on printing, delivered some time since before the Portsmouth Lyceum, and afterwards published. After speaking of the establishment of the Haspers at N. York, the author says, "At Brattleboro', in our sister state Vermont, is one which is deserving of notice. The printing establishment there keeps in operation (several) power presses. Connected with it is a paper mill, and a Book and Job Bindery at the other, so that (like the chrysalis changing of a vile catterpillar to a beautiful butterfly) what enters at one end, file cast off covering of the human body, is by a regular and rapid process brought out at the other extremity, beautiful paper finely printed and bound—a material for a permanent dress of the immortal mind. So rapid is the process that rags have been received at that mill in the morning, manufactured into paper and printed before night. The Comprehensive Commentary is now printing at that establishment. When it is completed, it will have consumed fifteen thousand reams of paper. Think not that the woollen or the cotton manufacturers are the only ones which benefit the agriculturist; for this one work will use the amount of a thousand bales of cotton in paper—and will have required the skins of sixty thousand sheep for its binding.

We understand that during the five years ending with the present, there will have been established at this establishment about 160,000 imperial octavo volumes averaging more than eight hundred pages each! These volumes contain each more than ten of the average of those issued by the Harpers, the largest publishing house in America, making an amount of matter issued equal to 1,600,000 such volumes as theirs! The business is now carried on by the "Brattleboro, Typographic Co." incorporated in 1836, with the privilege of holding a capital of $200,000.—Vt. Phenix.

Juvenile Hardihood.—A few days ago, two little sons of T. Toby, Esq. of New Orleans, 8 and 12 years of age, went hunting, and set out to return in the evening on what is called the "Shell Road," where they were soon overtaken by two unknown boys, of about the same age as themselves, having guns also. The four travelled along near each other for some distance. 'I have a good mind to shoot one of these chaps,' said the eldest of the stranger lads at length to his companion. 'Well, I dare you to shoot one,' said the youngest of the Toby's, in a tone of manly defiance. 'Most certainly I will,' coolly replied the stranger lad, at the same time raising his gun and peppering the young Toby with small shot. The boy now turned, and the wounded one as he levelled his piece; but the stranger boys hastily threw themselves inglorionsly to the bushes, leaving their undaunted opponents masters of the bloody field. The wounded lad soon picked the shot from his legs, and went home as cheerful as if nothing had happened.—Louis. Jour.

Great Curiosity.—Lieut. Comdt. Sturgis, of the Revenue Cutter Hamilton, showed us, on Saturday morning, a hoe, completely embedded in a stick of live oak timber, of Georgia growth, intended for the ship Republic, Built last year at Wareham, by Capt. David Nye, and now, sailing out of the port of New York. The timber measured 15 inches square, and the hoe was discovered by one of the ship builders cutting into it with an ax. It was carefully extracted from its hiding place with a chisel, and the eye of the hoe, was found near the centre of the stick. where was a knot indianting a branch, and the edge was an inch below the surface. The probability is that the hoe was suspended on a branch of the tree being cleared, and was forgotten, and escaped notice until the wood grew over and buried it, past all remembrance.—Boston Transcript.

The schr. Success, Stackpole, of Nantucket, from New Orleans bound to New York, laden with lead, castor oil and furniture, was wrecked on the Florida coast, 35 or 40 miles south of St. Augustine during a heavy gale on the 9th inst.

The captain and crew saved nothing except the clothing they had on; their provisions were all lost, and a voyage washed ashore. The captain, mate, three seamen, and one passenger all the souls on board, reached Mantanzas inlet, and all, except the passenger, succeeded in reaching the opposite shore. The passenger, contrary to the advice of his companions, kept on a heavy box cout and his boots, and when he plunged in the water he sank almost immediately, and was drowned; his name, we learn, was Charles M. Williams, a silver smith by trade, residing in Chamber street, New York.

The captain and crew arrived near the light house on the 17th inst., when they were discovered by the pilot boat, which took them off, and brought them to St. Augustine.

From Mexico.—Tampico journals to Sept. 1st, and Mexican to August 17th, have been received by the New Orleans Bee. The Tampico Telegraph states that the Noticias of Guhuahua is filled with accounts of robberies, murders, fires and a thousand excesses committed by the savages in Rosarion and Coyachic, on the neighboring farms and dwelling houses. The journal adds that, that portion of the country is in the greatest state of destitution, and deprived of any sources of protection from the incursions of the Indians.

A band of 60 robbers, well mounted and armed, assaulted a caravan of mules on the 17th of August between Var reyes and Tepeyahualco, despoiling the conductors of a large quantity of silver which they had concealed in their flour sacks. These marauders are supposed to form a part of the league of robbers, the constitution of which we publish a some weeks since.—Eve. Star.

Intercourse Between the Atlantic and Pacific.—The Baltimore American of Monday says: "We learn with much satisfaction that it is proposed to address a memorial, signed by the merchants of this city to the President of the United States, praying for the establishment of a line of Government packets between this country and Chagres, with a view to the speedy transmission of intelligence, over-land, to and from the Pacific Such an arrangement could not fail to produce the best consequences, not only in the rapid reception of advices from our national ships in those seas is concerned but would be of incalculable advantage to the commercial interests in furnishing the shortest channel of intercommunication, and a safe mode of transmitting specie under the protection of our flag. It is also proposed that the vessels employed be fast sailing schooners, of the description for the construction of which our shipwrights are so justly celebrated.

From the Stamford Sentinel.

Ages of the Presidents.—We gather the following interesting facts from a long article, published in the National Intelligencer, some six or eight months past.

George Washington was born in 1732; elected President in 1789; installed the same year at the age of 57; served eight years, and then retired to private life at the age of 65.

John Adams was born in 1735; elected in 1796, 62 years of age when installed: served 4 years, retired in 1801, at the age of 66.

Thomas Jefferson was born 1749; elected in 1800: installed in 1801, at the age of 58 years; served 8 years; retired from office in 1809 at the age of 66 years,

James Madison, was born 1751; elected in 1808; installed in 1809, at 58 years of age; served 8 years: retired in 1817, when he was 66 years old.

James Monroe was born 1758; elected in 1816; installed the next year, when he was 58 years of age; served 8 years; retired from the office in 1825, at the age of 66 years.

John Quincy Adams was born 1775; elected in 1824; installed the following year, at the age of 60 years; served 4 years; retired in 1828, being then 64 years of age.

Andrew Jackson was born 1767; elected in 1828; went into office in 1829, at the age of 62; served 8 years: retired in 1837, at the age of 70 years.

Martin Van Buren was born in 1782; elected in 1836; installed in 1837, at the age of 55 years.

It will be seen by the foregoing that 4 of our Presidents were 66 years of age when they retired from public life, one 65, one 70, and one John Q. Adams 64 when he left the Presidential chair, but he is still in public business.

The following are the ages of three other distinguished individuals, who are spoken of as candidates for the exalted station of President of the United States, viz:

William Henry Harrison was born in 1773; Henry Clay in 1796, and Daniel Webster in 17.

Mr. Van Buren is the youngest President we have ever had, and should he serve the second time, he will then retire to private life younger than any of his predecessors.

But should General Harrison be elected in 1840, he would go into power at an age more advanced than any before him. Mr. Clay is now in his 61st year and Mr. Webster in his 57th.

Synod of New Jersey.—We understand that the Synod of New Jersey, at its late meetings in Morristown, by a vote of 100 to 80, adopted a preamble and resolution, recognizing the General Assembly of which Dr. Plumer was Moderator, as the true General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. The Newark Presbytery was not exactly cut off but a resolution adopted making its standing depend on its choice of Commissioners to the General Assembly.—Newark Eagle.

A painful and lingering indisposition the Hon. Nelson Sanford died on the 14th inst. at his residence at Flatsburg L. I. He was a man much distinguished for talent, with a mind well cultivated, and possessing in an eminent degree, great decision of character.—He has filled several high and responsible stations with considerable success. He was first speaker in the N. Y. House of Assembly, then District Attorney of the U. S. for New York, and afterwards a Senator in the Congress of the U. S. for two successive years. He was then appointed Chancellor for the State of New York, which office he held for two years, during which period he made many important decisions. He relinquished it to represent his State in the U. S. Senate.—N. B. Times.

Beet Sugar.—Preparations are making to manufacture beet sugar in Northampton Mass. the coming season. In Northampton, about twelve acres are under cultivation, which will average fifteen tuns per acre, but when better understood, a larger crop may be expected. In French Flanders an average crop is fifteen tons to the acre; but forty tons are often produced; and in that country, it is said that even among the poorer class, no other than refined sugar is used. In Prussia the average crop is a ten tons to the acre, but in England, it is thirty tons, and a first rate acre sometimes runs to the acre.

Native Pearls.—We have just been shown (says the N. Y. Star,) by Doctor Peuchtwanger a large size and fine, beautiful native pearl, of a perfectly shining form, and a slight tinge of rose color, weighing nearly less than five and five-sixteenths of carats which would be worth in England $140. It was taken from an oyster from the beds in the Delaware river. Also, two others, of a still more delicate and beautiful color, and equally exact in symmetry, from the same quarter.

The Polar Star, published in Trenton, Gibson County Tennessee, relates a story of an old turkey cock, the property of Major Wolborn of that county, having raised a brooding hen of her nest took possession of her eggs, performed her duties until they were hatched, and may now be seen strutting with all the pomposity of hisnature, and is at present exhibiting the same tenderness of a mother in watching over and providing for his "little responsibilities."

Paper making at home and abroad.—A New York paper says—

"In the presence of 78 persons in London, a parcel of rags were recently taken, made into paper, dried, and printed on, in five minutes.—When the celerity becomes universal, loafers must dodge paper mills, as their ragged vestments will be whipped off, and tucked under their noses in the shape of a handbill advertising vegetants before they know it.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, in publishing the foregoing, remarks:—

Poh! This is nothing. The same thing has been done at the Inquirer Office time after time, within the last year or two. The very steam by which the first operation is performed, also performs this task, as our printing presses are all worked by the steam engine connected with the paper manufactory. John Bull is no doubt very ingenious, but Jonathan is quite a match for him.

For Health.—A writer in a London medical work, considers rail road traveling, with its other advantages, as conducive to health far above the common mode. The vibratory, or rather the oscillatory motion communicated to the human frame is very different from the swinging and jolting motions of a stage coach, and is productive of more salutary effects. It equal ses the circulation, promotes digestion, tranquilizes the nerves, and often causes sound sleep during the succeeding night—the exercise of this kind of travelling being unaccompanied by that insatiable aching and fatigue, which in weakly constitutions, prevents the nightly repose. The rail road bids fair to become the popular medical agent in many ailments to which the metropolitan and civic inhabitants are subject.

"If you want teeth, prepare to cut them soon," for we have an onion in our office large enough to supply a regiment of scape graces who may follow a rich relative to his last home. It weighs three pounds, measures 18 1-4 inches in circumference, of globular shape, and was raised from the seed this season by John M. Eddy, Esq. of Denmark, near Rockaway, in this county. Were we in a boasting humor since our late defeat we would banter any brother type to beat it if he could. This vegetable monster is suspended in our office for the benefit of the curious.—Jersey-man.

The poet Campbell, we are told by Willis, is coming to our country to visit the hallowed vale of Wyoming, Pennsylvania, which his pen has immortalized though never beheld by the author. It is also said that Mr. Dickens who writes under the signature of Boz, and is the author of Pickwick, Nicholas Nickleby, &c. will shortly embark for this country in the Great Western.

The dealers in dry goods at Lowell have entered into a compact (fully obligatory penalty for each offence to be given to a charitable institution,) to close their stores on every Wednesday evening, from October 8th, to March 20th, 1839. Their object is the moral and moral improvement derived from attendance on the Lyceum lectures delivered on those evenings.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that he is prepared to redeem the Treasury notes issued previous to the 1st May, 1838, on their presentation at the Treasury, in advance of the period on which they fall due.

Mr. Fennimore Cooper is preparing for the press the Naval History of the United States It is a subject rich in incident.

The following quaint toast was given at Wheeling, on the 4th of July, by a Mr. Felix O'Neil:

The memory of the man,
That owned the land,
That raised the corn,
That fed the goose,
That bore the quill,
That made the pen,
That wrote the Declaration of Independence

Imposition in Market.—Two New York butchers were lately fined $10 each, for selling mutton the kidneys of which were stuffed with the fat of other parts of the same animal.—Phil. Herald.

Lynching Extraordinary.—A barrel of whiskey was recently tarred and feathered, and then consumed by fire, at Valley Forge Va., after a temperance address by the Rev. Mr. Hunt; the leader of the work of destruction was a dealer in ardent spirits.

Poor Patronage.—Theatrical business seems to be at a low ebb in Montreal. The inhabitants are all too busy with Lord Durham's proclamation, &c. to think of amusement,—or at all events, of that kind of amusement. On Friday night the Transcript says, the house was opened at the usual hour, but there being not one person in it except the door-keepers and actors, it was quietly shut up again, and notice issued that there would be no performance.

The extent of the depression of the Ohio river is strikingly exemplified in the fact mentioned in the Wheeling Times, that the difference between the highest point attained by the water at Wheeling at the great flood of 1832 and the lowest point to which it has been this season, is just 44 feet, 5 inches, as ascertained by actual measurement.

The Peoria (Ill.) Register of the 6th instant, says the sickness prevails without the least abatement in that place. The business of the courts had been suspended in consequence. Among the victims was Judge Bigelow, known by his digest of the laws of New England.

System.—Curran said to Grattan, "You would be the greatest man of our age, if you would buy a few yar ds of red tape, and tie up your bills and papers."

Land at 50 cents an acre.—It may not be uninteresting to some of our readers to be apprised that the reduction of a portion of the refuse Chickasaw lands, to 50 cents an acre, took place under the graduation principle, on the 1st September inst. Heretofore the minimum price at which they could be obtained, was one dollar per acre. Those lands though not the best in the country, have nevertheless among them many fine spots suitable for cultivation, and would make very comfortable farms for small families.—Tuscumbian Alabamian.

Two young gentlemen of Cincinnati, fought a duel a short distance below the city, on the Kentucky side, a few days ago—that is, they shot towards each other with pistols, at 12 paces. We learn that both survived the report of their own pistols, and returned to town the same evening.—Maddison Banner.

Yankee Enterprise.—The brig William, Capt. Underwood, sailed from New York some months ago with the machinery complete for a cotton factory, with men women, boys and girls, to run it, bound to San Blas, at the mouth of the river Santiago on the west coast of Mexico. News has just been received of her safe arrival.

Beauty and Star, Victoria's favorite Horses.—These two state-horses, called Beauty and Star, the former twenty-three and the latter twenty, seven years old, have borne, on important occasions, George III. George IV. William IV. and lastly Queen Victoria.

Driving Business.—The Boston Transcript states that in a house in a town in Norfolk county, Massachusetts, three courtships are going on in one house, embracing three generations—a daughter, mother, and grandmother.

Governor Jennison, of Vermont, has recommended the passage of a law abolishing imprisonment for debt.

Sad Accident.—Governor Pennington, we are sorry to hear, was severely injured at Trenton, on Sunday evening, 21st inst. while attempting to jump from a carriage, in consequence of the restiveness of the horses. The upper joint of one of the hips is dislocated, and it is thought he will not be able to attend to his public duties for some time.

The votes for members of Congress have not yet been counted, in consequence of the accident recorded above, and of course we are as much in the dark as last week. The vexed question will not probably be decided in some time.

New Jersey Legislature.

The Legislature met agreeably to law, at 3 o'clock, on Tuesday afternoon, 23d inst.

Andrew Parsons, of Passaic, was re-elected Vice President of Council, by a vote of 9 to 6, over R. R. Morris, of Sussex.

Robert E. Horner was re elected Secretary, 10 to 7, over James D. Westcott, V. B.

Messrs. Brittin and Kennedy were appointed a committe to report rules and regulations for Council.

Mr. Morris presented a petition from Israel Stratton, of the county of Cumberland, setting forth that he received a majority of the votes for member of council, that the county clerk improperly gave the certificate of election to Nathaniel Foster, and praying relief, which petition was read and referred to Messrs. Morris, Smallwood, and Armstrong.

In Assembly, while the members were being sworn, the members from Cumberland being called, and having come forward to present their certificates, Mr. Cassidy said, it might be proper to make one or two remarks. These gentlemen, he believed had been elected by a minority of votes and had received their certificates in a way which perhaps was not very fair. He therefore objected to their being sworn, and made a motion to that effect. 26 were in favor of it, and 29 against it. So it was not agreed to.

After the members were sworn, the Assembly proceeded to the choice of speaker. Mr. Stites nominated Lewis Condict, Mr. Hull nominated John Cassidy. The former received 32, and the latter 19 votes. Mr. Codict was therefore appointed.

Peter V. Compack was appointed clerk, 32 to 20, over Joseph C. Potts.

Wednesday, Oct. 24th.

The Governor's Message was delivered to both houses, 500 copies were ordered to be printed by each house.

In Assembly, Mr. Cassidy presented a petition from David Whitaker, David Jones and Samuel Bowen, claiming to be elected members of Assembly, from the county of Cumberland, and praying to be allowed to take their seats. It was referred to the committee on elections, consisting of Pennington, Cassidy, Gen. Hancock and Brown with power to send for persons and papers, and leave to sit during the sessions of the assembly.

Thursday, Oct. 25th.

In both houses, the standing committees were appointed. Also, a motion was made to repeal th act of last session relating to the bounty on silk.

Friday, Oct. 26th.

Legislature went into Joint Meeting for the appointment of officers.

Lewis Condict was appointed president of the Joint Meeting, and Robert E. Horner, Secretary.

For Governor, Wm. Pennington received 38 votes, and James S. Green, 28.

Many appointments were made, among them we notice Andrew Smalley, Justice for Somerset county, and Benjamin Jennings, commissioner of Warren township.

Adjourned to Monday afternoon.

We shall publish the Governor's message next week.

A short argument.—A gentleman was railing a few days since at a public table against the law of Massachusetts, as depriving men of their natural rights to buy and sell and get gain; and turning to his neighbor, asked him if he did not think it high handed oppression. The gentleman replied, Sir, call it oppression if you please, I will state one fact well known to myself. A tax bill was recently brought me on my city property of $800 for which I gave my check. I carefully looked into the subject and found that $650 of it was for the support of drunkenness. Now what is this but oppression. But I suppose I have no rights. Rum sellers have all. They may tax me to support the criminals and drunkards they make $650 and I must be still. Sir, said the gentleman Massachusetts is right. It is the best argument I ever heard. It has overthrown all my theory about free trade. I will say no more but go the whole with you.

Burial of Black Hawk.—His body we understand was not interred, but was placed on the earth in a sitting posture, with his cane clenched in his hand, enclosed with slabs or rails. This is the manner in which chiefs of the Sac nation are usually buried, and was done at his own special request. A considerable number of whites we understand, were present at the disposition of his remains.

The U. S. government have sent a consular agent to Hayti, but without in any respect recognizing the government of the Island. The agent writes after an interview with President Boyer, that the Haytians are much aggrieved that the U. S. have no accredited agent, and that a mere letter from our Secretary of State announcing the appointment to their government would be received as sufficient, and that "the ten per cent. additional duty now charged on vessels of all nations which have not accredited agents, would be immediately removed from ours, and the trade placed on the same footing as that of any other nation." No formal recognition by Congress was asked for.

Jersey Products.—The Mount Holly N. J. Herald says:—"Mr. Joseph White of this town, from one vine raised 12 of the largest species of pumpkins the weight of which amount to 720 pounds. The largest weighs 148, and the next 130. The seed was planted in a garden without the hill being manured. In the same garden Mr. W. has a Morus Multicaulis tree, of this year's growth, that measures 4 3-4 inches in circumference 9 feet 1 inch high, and with side wood measures 67 feet. George haywood, has also raised from one seed upwards of 400 pounds of pumpkins."

Stoves,

Cheaper than ever!

J. THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally, that they have now on hand a large assortment of Stoves of the most improved patterns for burning coal or wood; and as they wish to close their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they have ever before offered in this market. Their assortment consists of Stanley's Rotary of all sizes, Pooley's, Church & Stanley's, Jetsons', and all sizes of the nine plates.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low: they consist chiefly of Pooley's, Clussmann's, Lyne's, James' Oxley's, Wilsons, Gilis' and Nine Plates; they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat; we shall only say, that they are now made handsomer and better than ever; and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended as Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Giver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever and Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.
Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley.

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit, I be publish, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and purgative, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent such sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many months, and especially for socials for scarcities worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the principles, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservators of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views of our duty, we urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume
OF THE
New York Mirror,
Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work: Dashings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and peculiar music, Arranged for the piano-forte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—literary notices upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—specimens of the drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, machanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editor, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Epes Sargent, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Mrs. Sigourney, Fay Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Iamaan Willis, and a list of twio hundred others, well known to the reading community, in various departments of literature, and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume in every respect, not only unsurpassed, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and it is were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable substance of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle countrywomen, the seclided student, the man of business, and the gay scholar. In short, the New York Mirror, in every respect, shall be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super-royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

GREEN BROOK
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing, fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are not expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience in every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its encouragement. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the
COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,
By Mr. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee :—Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work for all my purposes. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—and, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Subscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—this well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

This indispensable basis, confidence of opinion is however not enough to constitute the character in question. For many persons, who have been conscious and proud of a much stronger grasp of thought than ordinary men, and have held the most decided opinions on important things to be done, have yet exhibited, in the latelessness, or inconstancy of their actions, a contrast and a discordance to the operations of their understandings. For want of some cogent feeling impelling them to carry every internal decision into action, they have been still left where they were; and a dignified judgement has been seen in the supine plight of having no effective forces to execute its decrees.

It is evident then, and I perceive I have partially anticipated this article in the first letter, that another essential principle of the character is, a total incapability of surrendering to indifference or delay the serious determinations of the mind. A strenuous will must accompany the conclusions of thought and constantly urge the utmost efforts for their practical accomplishment. The intellect must be invested, if I may so describe it, with a glowing atmosphere of passion, under the influence of which, the cold dictates of reason take fire, and spring into active powers.

Revert once more in your thoughts to the persons most remarkably distinguished by this decision. You will perceive, that instead of allowing themselves to sit down delighted after the labor of successful thinking, as if they had performed some great thing, they regard this labor but as a circumstance of preparation, and the conclusion resulting from it as of no more value till applied to the greatest labor which is to follow, than the astonished lamps of the Resurrection. They are not disposed to be content in a region of mere ideas, while they ought to be advancing into the scene of realities; they retire to that region sometimes, as ambitious adventurers anciently went to Delphi, to consult but not to reside. You will therefore find them almost uniformly in determined pursuit of some object, on which they fix a keen and steady look, and which they never lose sight of, while they follow it through the continued trial itself or other things.

The manner of a person actuated by such a spirit, seems to say, Do you think that I would not disdain to adopt a purpose which I would not devote my utmost force to effect; or that having thus devoted my exertions, I will intermit or withdraw them, through indolence, debility, or caprice; or that I will surrender my object to any interference except the uncontrollable dispensations of Providence? No, I am linked to my determination by iron bands; my purpose is become my fate, and I must accomplish it, unless arrested by calamity or death.

This display of systematic energy seems to indicate a coast tution of mind in which the passions are exactly commensurate with the intellectual part, and at the same time hold an inseparable correspondence with it, like the faithful sympathy of the tides with the phases of the moon. There is such an equality and connection, that subjects of the decisions of judgment become proportionally and of course the objects of passion. When the judgment decides with a very strong preference, that same strength of preference, actuating also the passions, devotes them with energy to the object, as long as it is thus approved; and this will produce such a conduct as I have described. When therefore a firm self- confiding, and unstirring judgement fails to make a decisive character, it is evident either that the passions in that mind are too languid to be capable of strong and unremitting excitement which defect makes it impossible to resolute men or that they perversely sometimes coincide with judgment and sometimes clash with it, which makes an inconsistent or versatile man.

There is no man so irresolute as not to act with determination in many single cases, where the motive is powerful and simple, and where there is no need of plan and perseverance; but this gives no claim to the term character, which expresses the habitual tenor of a man's active being. The character may be displayed in the successive unconnected undertakings, which a mesh of limited extent, and end with the attainment of their objects. But it is seen in the greatest advantage in those grand schemes of action, which have no necessary point of conclusion, which continue on through successive years, and extend even to that dark period when the agent himself is withdrawn from human sight.

I have repeatedly remarked to you, in conversation, the effect of what has been called a ruling passion. When its object is noble, and an enlightened understanding directs its movements, it appears to me a great felicity; but whether its object be noble or not, it infallibly creates, when it exists in great force, that active ardour constancy, which I describe as a capital feature of the decisive character. The subject of such a commanding passion wonders, if indeed he were at leisure to wonder, at the persons who pretend to attain importance to an object which they make no part but the most languid effort to secure. The utmost power of the man are constrained into the service of the favorite cause by this passion, which sweeps away, as it advances, all the trivial objections and little opposing motives, and seems almost to open a way through impossibilities. This spirit comes on him in the morning as soon as he recovers his consciousness, and commands and impels him through the day with a power from which he could not emancipate himself if he would. When the force of habit is added, this determination becomes irresistible, and seems to assume rank with the great laws of nature, making it nearly as certain that such a man will persist in his course as that in the morning the sun will rise.

A persisting untameable efficacy of soul gives a seductive and pernicious dignity even to a character and a course which every moral principle forbids us to approve. Often in the narrations of history and fiction, an agent of the most dreadful designs compels a sentiment of deep respect for the unconquerable mind displayed in their execution. While we shudder at his activity, we say with regret, mingled with an admiration which borders on partiality, what a noble being this would have been, had not his destiny! The partiality is evinced in the very selection of terms, by which we shew that we are tempted to refer his atrocity rather to his destiny than to his choice. I wonder whether an eclectic reader of Paradise Lost, relative to the leader of the infernal spirits: a proof, if such were the fact, that a very serious error has been committed by the greatest poet. In some of the high examples of ambition, we almost revere the force of mind which impelled them forward through the longest series of action, superior to doubt and fluctuation, and deadinful of cease, of pleasure, of opposition, and of hazard. We bow to the ambitious spirit which reached the proud sublime, in the reply of Pompey to his friends who thus aided him from venture ng on a tempestuous sea, in order to be at one on an important occasion: "It is necessary for me to go, it is not necessary for me to live."

Revenge has produced wonderful examples of this unmanking controlling to a purpose. Zinga is a well supported illustration. And you may have read a real instance of a Spaniard, who, being injured by another inhabitant of the same town, resolved to destroy him; the other was apprized of this and received with the utmost secrecy, as he thought, to another town at a considerable distance, where however he had not been more than a day or two, before he found that his enemy was arrived there. He refrained in the same manner to several parts of the kingdom, remote from each other; but in every place quickly perceived that the deadly pursuer was near him. At last he was struck to death America where he had enjoyed his security but a very short time, before his unrelenting enemy came up with him, and effected his purpose.

You may recollect the intention, in one of our conversations, of a young man, who wasted in two or three years a large patrimony in profligate revels with a numb r of worthless associates who called themselves his friends, and who, when his estates should be had again; he had formed its plan too, which he instantly began to execute. He walked hastily forward, determined to do the very first opportunity, of however humble a kind, to gain any money though it were ever so despicable a trifle, and resolved absolutely not to spend if he could help it, a farthing of whatever he might obtain. The first thing that drew his attention was a heap of coals shot out of carts on the pavement before a house. He offered himself to shovel or wheel them into the place where they were to be laid, and was employed. He received a few pence for the labor. The first assistance of the saving part of his plan, requested some small gratuity of meat and drink, which was given him. He then looked out for the next thing that might chance to offer and went, with indefatigable industry, through a succession of servile employments, in different places, of longer and shorter duration, still scrupulously avoiding, as far as possible the expense of a penny. He promptly seized every opportunity which could advance his design, without regarding the meanness of occupation or appearance. By this meth od he had gained, after a considerable time, money enough to purchase, in order to sell gain, a few cattle of which he had taken pains to understand the value. He speedily but cautiously turned his first gains into second advantages; retained without a single deviation his extreme parsimony and thus advanced by degrees into larger transactions and incipient wealth. I did not hear, or have forgotten, the continued course of his life; but the final result was that he more than recovered his lost possessions, and died an inveterate miser, worth £80,000. I have always recollected this as a signal instance, though in an unfortunate and ignoble direction, of the decisive character, and of the extraordinary effect which, according to the general laws, belongs to the strongest form of such a character.

The Unknown Painter.

One beautiful summer morning, about the year 1631, several youths of Seville approached the dwelling of the celebrated painter Murillo, where they all arrived nearly at the same time. After the usual salutations, they entered the studio. Murillo was not yet there, and each of the pupils walked up quickly to his easel to see if the pencil had dried, or perhaps admire in it the work of the preceding evening.

Mendez, with a careless air, approached his easel, when an exclamation of astonishment escaped him, and he gazed in mute surprise on his canvass, on which was rougly sketched a most beautiful head of the Virgin; but the expression so admirable, the lines so clear, the contour so graceful, that compared with the figures by the which it was surrounded, it seemed as if some heavenly visitant had descended among them.

"Ah, what is the matter?" said a rough voice. The pupils turned at the sound and all made a respectful obeisance to the great master.

"Look, senor Murillo, look!" exclaimed the youths, as they pointed to the easel of Mendez.

"Who has painted this—who has painted this head, gentlemen!" asked Murillo, eagerly.

"Speak, tell me. He who has painted the Virgin will one day be master of us all. Speak, whoso he had done it. What a touch! what delicacy! Mendez, my dear pupil, was it you!

"No, senor," replied Mendez, in a solemn tone.

"Was it you, then, Iturtu, or Ferdinand, or Carlos?"

But, they all gave the same reply as Mendez, "It is said not, however, some here without hands said Murillo impatiently.

"This is certainly a curious affair," observed Murillo, "but we shall soon learn who is this mighty visitant. Sebastian," he continued, addressing a little mulatto boy, about fourteen years old, who appeared at his call. "I did not desire you to sleep here every night?"

"Yes, master," said the boy, with timidity.

"And have you done so?"

"Yes, master."

"Speak, instantly, who was here last night and this morning before the gentlemen came? speak slave, or I'll make you acquainted with my cudgel," said Murillo, angrily to the boy, who continued to twist the hand of his trowsers without replying.

"Ah, you don't choose to answer," said Murillo, pulling his ear.

"No one, master, no one," replied the trembling Sebastian with eagerness.

"That is false," exclaimed Murillo.

"No one, but me I swear to you master, cried the mulatto, throwing himself on his knees, in the middle of the room, and holding out his hands in supplication before his master.

"Listen to me," pursued Murillo. "I wish to know who has sat since the head of the Virgin, and all the figures which my pupil had every morning here on coming to the studio. This night, instead of going to bed, you shall keep watch, and if by to-morrow you don't discover who the culprit is, you shall have 25 strokes from the lash. You hear—I have said; now go and grind the colors, and you, gentlemen, to work.

It was night, and the studio of Murillo, the most celebrated painter of Seville—this studio, which during the day was so cheerful and animated, was now silent as the grave. A single lamp burned upon a marble table, and a young boy, whose ample but animated red with the surrounding darkness, but whose eyes sparkled like diamonds at midnight, leaned against an easel. "Twenty-five lashes to-morrow if I do not tell who sketched those figures, and perhaps more if I do. Oh, my God, come to my aid" and the little mulatto threw himself upon the mat where he soon fell fast asleep.

Sebastian awoke at day break; it was only 3 o'clock; any other boy would probably have gone to sleep again; but so Sebastian, who had but three hours he could call his own.

"Courage, courage, Sebastian!" he exclaimed, as he shook himself awake, "three hours are thine—only three hours! then perhaps they will be mine, not belong to my master,—slave. Let me at least be my own master for three short hours. To begin, these figures must be effaced;" and seizing a brush, he approached the Virgin, which appeared more beautiful than ever.

"Efface this!" he exclaimed, "efface this! No, I will die first. Efface this! they dare not—neither dare I. No—that head—she breathes—she speaks—it seems as if her blood would flow. I should offer to efface it, and that I should be a murderer. No, no, no; rather let me finish it.

Scarcely had he uttered these words, when, seizing a palette, he seated himself at the easel and was soon totally absorbed in his occupation. Hour after hour passed unheeded by Sebastian, who was too much engrossed with the beautiful creature of his pencil, which seemed bursting into life, to mark, the flgh of time. "Another touch," he exclaimed; "a soft shade here—now the mouth. Yes, there! it opens those eyes—they pierce me thro'! what a forehead!—what delicacy! Oh, my beautiful—" and Sebastian forgot the hour, forgot he was a slave—forgot his dreaded punishment—all, all was obliterated from the soul of the youthful artist, who saw nothing, thought of nothing, but his beautiful picture.

But who can describe the horror and consternation of the unhappy slave, when, on suddenly turning round, he beheld the whole pupils, with his master at their head standing beside him

Sebastian never once dreamed of justifying himself, and with his palette in one hand, and his brushes in the other, he hung down his head, a waiting in silence the punishment he believed he justly merited. For some moments a dead silence prevailed; for if Sebastian was confounded at being caught in the commission of so flagrant a crime, Murillo and his pupils were no less astonished at the discovery they had made.

Murillo having, with a gesture of his hand, imposed silence on his pupils, who could scarcely restrain themselves from giving away to their admiration, approached Sebastian, and concealing his emotion, said in a cold and severe tone, while he looked alternately from the beautiful head of the Virgin to the terrified slave, who stood like a statue before him. "Who is your master, Sebastian?"

"You," replied the boy, in a voice scarcely audible.

"I mean your drawing master, said Murillo.

"You, senor."

"It cannot be; I never gave you lessons," replied the astonished painter.

"But you gave them to others, and I listened to th m, rejoined the boy, emboldened by the kindness of his master.

"And you have done better than listen; you have profited by them," exclaimed Murillo, somewhat longer to conceal his admiration. "Gentlemen, does this boy merit punishment or reward?"

At the word punishment, Sebastian's heart beat quick; the word reward gave him a little courage, but fearing that his ears deceived him, he looked with timid and imploring eyes towards his master.

"A reward, senor," cried the pupils in a breath.

"That is well: but what shall it be?"

Sebastina began to breathe.

"Ten ducats at least," said Mendez.

"Fifteen," cried Ferdinand.

"No," said Gonzalo, "a beautiful new dress for the next holiday."

"Speak, Sebastian," said Murillo, looking at his slave, whom none of these rewards seemed to move. "Are these things to your taste? Tell me what you ask for; I am so much pleased with your beautiful composition, that I will grant any request you may make. Speak, then, do not be afraid."

"Oh, master, if I dared—" and Sebastian, clasping his hands, fell at the feet of his master. It was easy to read in the half opened lips of the boy, and his sparkling eyes, some devouring thought within, which timidity prevented him from uttering.

With the view of encouraging him each of the pupils suggested some favor for him to demand.

"Come, take courage;" said Murillo, gaily.

"The master is so kind to-day," said Ferdinand half aloud, "I would risk something; ask your freedom, Sebastian."

At these words Sebastian uttered a cry of anguish, and raising his eyes to his master, he exclaimed in a voice choked with sobs, "the freedom of my father! the freedom of my father!"

And these also, the master, who no longer able to conceal his emotion, threw his arms around Sebastian, and pressed him to his breast.

"Your pencil," he continued, "shows that you have talent; your request shows that you have a heart; the artist is complete. From this day consider yourself no only a my pupil, but as my son. Happy Murillo! I have done more than paint, I have made a painter."

Murillo kept his word, and Sebastian Gomez, after having been under the name of the mulatto of Murillo, became one of the most celebrated painters in Spain. There may yet be seen in the churches of Seville the celebrated picture which he had been found painting by his master; also at St. Ann, another done by Joseph, which is extremely beautiful; and others of the highest merit.

A Highwayman Outwitted.—"Stand and deliver," were the words addressed to a tailor trying his luck on foot, by a highwayman, whose brace of pistols looked rather dangerous than otherwise.

"I'll do that with pleasure," was the reply, at the same time handing over to the outstretched palm of the robber, a purse apparently pretty well stocked; "but continued he, "suppose you do me a favor in return. My friends would laugh at me were I to go home and tell them I was robbed with so much ease, so I should like to prove you live your two bull-dogs right through my hat; it will look like resistance." His request was acceded to; but scarcely had the smoke dom ne discharge of the weapons passed away, when the tailor pulled out a rusty old horse pistol one in his turn, politely requested the thunderstruck highway man to shell out every thing of value, his pistols not omitted, about him.

Death of Joseph Lancaster.—The injuries received by Mr. Lancaster a few days since, in being run down in New York by a runaway horse and cha ise, we regret to learn have proved fatal. He died yesterday at his residence, aged 67 years. Mr. L. was a native of London, and belonged to the society of friends. His distinguished services in the cause of juvenile education have filled the world through which he was doomed almost to, beg his bread, with his fame, and now that he is beyond the reach of human succor or sympathy we may look for the most liberal encomiums of his merit, and services.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

To the Legislative Council, and General Assembly, of the State of New Jersey.

Gentlemen:—You are again assembled for the responsible work of legislation. Every return of this season brings with it more or less solicitude, lest measures should be adopted which may retard, and not promote the general welfare With a people, the larger portion of whom are engaged in agriculture, there is far more danger if too much, than of too little legislation; and it may well be questioned whether there is any public necessity for a fresh volume of laws every year. In some of the States, to avoid the evil of too much legislation, the Legislature meets only once in two years. And it is undoubtedly our true policy to have the laws few in number, and plain and easy to be understood, but fluctuating but permanent, and to insist that they be rigidly enforced. The best wish in my power to offer you is, that your present session may be distinguished rather by the wisdom and the obvious necessity, than the number of its enactments.

Whatever views we may be disposed to take of public policy, it is quite certain that we live in a day of the most trying character to Republican institutions. In looking to the defences of the State, we are too prone to narrow our views in the comparatively unimportant event of an election. At such times we look to the predominant state of public opinion, to trace the consequences of the current principles and conduct of society, and to deliberate calmly on the best modes of ensuring the high purposes of the institutions which we hold in trust, for ourselves and those who are to come after us. The chief duty and care of all governments are to protect the rights of property and the tranquility of society; to secure and support the feeble against the strong, the peaceful against the turbulent, and the right against fraud and oppression. Unless these ends are attained our forms are a vain show. How jealous then should every man be who values our system of Government, of the slightest encroachment on these fundamental rights. If we would be honest with ourselves, we must frankly admit that there is a growing relaxation of the salutary restraints of reason and law. Experience is lost upon us if we deny it. As a people, we are as sober and intelligent, as free and as ready to be free, as any in the world; yet, like all other people, we have passions and prejudices, which require the wholesome restraints of law. We have seen lawless mobs rioting upon the community without even an attempt to bring the aggressors to the punishment they deserve. Public opinion, generally sound has been too kind to error; and the wildest schemes and doctrines have been permitted to pass unrebuked, until they have almost acquired the authority of truths. Under party auspices, the most disorganizing dogmas have sprung up in all directions, and that free spirit of inquiry by which men's minds are preserved in a healthy condition, too often yields a slavish acquiescence to arbitrary opinion. Men who know better—men who occupy high official stations, in their zeal for popular favor have given sanction to the doctrines which must subvert the fundamental laws of all civil society, unless they are corrected by an enlightened public sentiment. According to these theories, not only are the rights of property depending upon the will of an annual Legislature, but all law and right are in fact at the mercy of a victorious faction. There is nothing so fixed that a majority may not change it. Nothing so sacred that their voice may not consign to destruction. Such revolutionary views must be put away by the intelligence, and integrity of the people, or the days of the Republic are numbered. In New Jersey we may felicitate ourselves upon having been preserved from riotous meetings, and the guilt of sanctioning any of those wicked and dangerous doctrines which tend to destroy the security of person and property. Let it, gentlemen, always be our pride, whatever may be our other respects our political views, to maintain the laws by redy upon their unchanged and regular operation for the redress of grievances, and to secure every citizen in the enjoyment of his constitutional rights and possessions.

The most mischievous of all disorganizers are those who encourage and foment jealousies among the different conditions of society: the demagogues who seek to array the employed against the employer, the poor against the rich, and one branch of industry against another. Such men war against the peace and harmony of the whole and should be held up to our universal condemnation as the common enemies of all. There is no truth more obvious than that all prosperous communities are made up of every variety of condition; each has his allotted sphere of usefulness, and there a mutual dependence and relation equal from which none are exempt, and from the multitude a harmony of interests that never grow than madness to disturb.

ballot box is an instrument of great power. To keep that pure should be our constant aim. The laws on that subject are well adapted if put in force and guarded against fraud. They restrain the use of legislation on the subject last mentioned. They contributed to the present improved condition of things in New Jersey, all men of candor admit. Instead of promoting an angry and contentious spirit between the State and the Banks, which must have produced a like spirit between the Banks and their dealers, the whole difficulty has been happily overcome. Quiet and satisfaction now prevail, and all the Banks in the State, we believe, have resumed the payment of their obligations in specie, and that too with a praiseworthy promptness, and without the slightest public sensation. Moderation and forbearance was the only course of safety in such a crisis; and the people exhibited a character which must ever command the respect of all. At the time that it took place the suspension was inevitable, and the resumption was made as early as was practicable. It is due to the State of N. Jersey to say that they have all passed through the most trying period ever known in our country, and no man can say he has lost a dollar by any one of them. With the restoration of specie payments business has gradually revived, to the great joy of every man who has a heart, to feel for the distresses and misfortunes of his countrymen. This whole subject may therefore be considered at rest for the present, and as not requiring any further legislative action.

In relation to the Treasury of the State I desire to be explicit and plain. The last Legislature was improperly assailed upon this subject during the recent election. It is wise for those who may be entrusted by their fellow citizens with the management of the public interests, to be patient under misusage, and to vindicate their measures with moderation and forbearance. It has been charged that the Legislature increased the taxes of the people. A plain statement will expose the aspersion, and place this subject in its proper light.

The tax of $40,000 has been spoken of as unusual, uncalled for and manifesting a recklessness in the expenditure of the public money. In this true? For a long succession of years, excepting only the year preceding the last, it had been the practice to raise this amount by tax. This is known to all intelligent men in the State. There is nothing unusual in the proceeding. The commission that preceding was silent, and unless well advised, it will be readily perceived, would render a recurrence to the more necessary. It is not for me to assign motives for the suspension of this ordinary means of supporting the government: but I am quite certain that there was not, at that time, anything in the condition of the finances of the State to justify it. The omission to raise a tax was against the express recommendation of the Treasurer at the time. The treasurer is now dead, and has been for some time, and I must elapse before we shall be entirely relieved from its effects.

The State was in no respect benefitted by it, and we still owe a part of the money borrowed to support the Government during that very year. The Treasurer in his report to the Legislature on the 23d of Febuary, 1837, recommends a tax of twenty thousand dollars for that year under the very favorable estimate he then made. And when the Legislature met at the extra session in May, the Treasurer, in his report of the 25th, only three months thereafter, after stating the disbursements from October 1st preceding at $88,938 29, uses this language—"it will be seen by the foregoing statement, that the disbursements for the present year will largely exceed the estimate of the Treasurer of the 23d of February last. The estimate was based upon the expenses of former years, but the expenses of Government have been unusually large the present year, together with the several appropriations, viz: for repairs of Government property, finishing State Prison, converting Old Prison into an Arsenal, &c. it swells up the account already about $6000 beyond the former estimate, and will at the end of the current year (if all the appropriations and expenditures are carried out) exceed the estimate about $12,000. With regard to your second inquiry whether any legislative action is necessary to procure funds for the support of Government, the Treasurer thinks it necessary to call the attention of your honorable body to the fact that the Treasury is minus several thousand dollars as above stated, and would therefore merely suggest without presuming to dictate, the propriety of the Legislature authorizing a temporary loan to meet the present demands upon the Treasury."

It is clear that the omission to levy a tax for the year 1837 was against the recommendation of the Treasurer, and that in three months afterwards he was obliged to call on the Legislature to authorize a loan of money to meet the demands on the Treasury. The Governor appears by his message to the Legislature on the 8th of January 1837, evidently had no other idea than that a Tax was necessary, for after recurring to the situation of the Treasury, he says "From this statement of our finances it is evident that it will be unnecessary, for the current year to raise by direct taxation from the people an amount greater than has been usually raised in that manner. I would recommend as a general rule, that all impositions upon the people for the support of Government should be as far as possible uniform both to the objects of taxation and amount of tax, not fluctuating with every extraordinary excess or deficiency of the Treasury." And in the message of the 26th of October, of the same year, in which he says "That without providing for the payment of the debt of the State, or for the payment of any appropriation which may be made, the ordinary disbursements for the support of Government during the current year will exceed our income by the amount of $23,956 48 above stated, that it is therefore evident that it will be necessary again to resort to a State tax."

These are the views of the officers of the government, of the situation of the Treasury at and prior to the meeting of the last Legislature. The Treasury was exhausted, demands were presented which could not be paid, and the officers of the Government were pressing the necessity of adopting some measures to relieve the embarrassments into which the state was thrown by the extra session in the spring preceding. The Legislature had refused to provide any means for security, on relief; and they were left to the alternative of a loan, or a tax. Both were unpopular measures, and the Legislature had to choose between them. They chose the former, and in my opinion faithful to the interests of the people. Time has proved the correctness of their decision. As the case now stands, and will not be removed until the Treasury meets the coming winter, we have been obliged, under your authority, to borrow money for the ordinary support of Government. My duties connected with the Treasury are little more than signing orders. But one warrant has been signed except such as the law required, and as to them I have felt it to be due to the credit of the State that they should be promptly paid, whenever presented at the Treasury.

The Treasurer, under the law of the last session will furnish you with a detailed statement of the disbursements for the past year, containing the items of expenditure: by which you will be enabled to judge of the manner in which that department has been managed, and the many difficulties to which it has been subjected. By that statement it will be found that, after deducting such payments as are properly applicable to the previous year, that the current expenses of the last year, instead of exceeding, do not equal those of the preceding, year by the sum of $16,000.

The whole amount of money paid out for all purposes will not exceed $74,000. Of this sum $8000 are properly applicable to debts of the preceding year, leaving the sum of $66,000, under ordinary appropriations, chargeable to the current year. To meet this demand all the money received from every quarter, including that from the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company, amounts to $32,389 17, and the residue has been borrowed, and will be repaid when the money arising from the tax of last year shall be received into the Treasury. When you come to examine the Treasurers accounts, if there should appear to be any items which can be reduced consistently with the public welfare, it will be your duty and no doubt your pleasure to make the retrenchment. I recommend that you make no appropriations which can with propriety be avoided, but that you provide for meeting such as are made, and for the current expenses of the government. I am opposed to accumulating a debt on the state. It is our true policy to keep the current expenses within the current resources.

As the accounts of the Treasurer are not yet closed, it is impossible, at present, to furnish more than this general statement of the condition of the Treasury.

The School fund amounts, at this time, to $278,234, after paying the appropriation of $30,000 for the present year. The investment of this fund remains the same as last year.

There are at this time in the New York and Philadelphia institutions for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, 20 beneficiaries of the state: 9 in the former and 12 in the latter. There are 2 beneficiaries also, in the Philadelphia institution for the blind. The number of applications for assistance, made to me by the friends of this unfortunate class of persons, satisfies me that the state should enlarge the scope of her beneficence. I am well satisfied that they receive in those institutions every attention and care, which their particular circumstances require. The number now receiving assistance from the State exhausts the appropriation made for that object.

I enclose a report from the Quarter Master General, by which you will be fully informed of the condition of the army and military stores under his superintendence.

The report of Professor Henry D. Rogers on the geological survey of the state, is also enclosed. By that report you will perceive that he is diligently pursuing his investigations, which must greatly promote the Agricultural interests of the State. I send you the entire report as the best means of communicating to you the progress he has made.

By a report made to me by the keeper of the State prison, on the 1st of this month, it appears that there were at that time 163 prisoners under his care, which is a greater number than was ever reported under any former period. The new prison and grounds are nearly completed, and the keeper estimates the balance in favor of the prison for the present year as about the same as the last. The system now adopted of keeping the prisoners in solitary confinement at stated tasks, it is believed will be found the best mode yet devised for the government of the penitentiary.

You will permit me, in conclusion, to renew the expression of my ardent desire that you will not allow the great interest of education, under the common school system, to pass without your careful attention. It is a subject that should be dear to every Jerseyman. The whole strength of our institutions depends upon the intelligence and information of the people. My own opinion always has been, and still is, that there should be in this, as there is in several other states, an efficient road to this branch of the public service.

WM. PENNINGTON.

Trenton, Oct. 24, 1838.

Among the articles exhibited at the late fair of the American Institute in New York was a new species of cloth. There were several pieces of different textures and thicknesses. It was from a factory in Norwalk, Con. and is made without either spinning or weaving, by a process similar to that employed in manufacturing hat bodies. It is without threads, and finished on the surface, leaving the body of the cloth perfect and entirely unimpaired by the process of finishing. In manufacturing, the wool is put together at right angles, in a web, by very ingenious machinery, with great rapidity, and at an incredible small expense. It can be made of any desired thickness. The advantages claimed for this over cloth manufactured in the ordinary way are, that it is much less expensive, that it is warmer and that it will last longer. We should judge from the specimen before us that this cloth would be an excellent article for overcoats. One thing is certain about it, he who wears it can never have a threadbare coat.

The proprietors of this invention feel very sanguine that it is calculated to effect an entire revolution in the woolen manufacture, and raise the branch of our domestic industry to an effectual competition with the foreign market.

Jonathan Outdoor.—Our transatlantic brethren can cope with them in any thing only let them trumpet forth our abilities as they do. A gentleman at Cooksborough tells me that he has a horse of extraordinary speed, and that he is constantly offered sums of money for him. He says he will not sell him for any price, as he is a favorite, and he is determined to keep him for the use of his family.

A man in the dress of a workman was lately walking in the streets of Berlin with a packet in his hand sealed with five seals, addressed with an address and a wish that it should be handed to the Queen's birth. As the bearer appeared of a low he was accosted by a passer-by, who asked him who he was looking for. The simple countryman placed the packet in the inquirer's hands, and requested that he would read the address. The reply was made as with an agreeable surprise, "Why, this letter is for me: I have been expecting it for a long while!" The messenger upon this, demanded ten thalers for the carriage of the packet, which was readily paid with a liberal addition to the porter. The new possessor of the packet hastened to an obscure corner to examine his prize, but, on breaking the seals, found nothing but a few sheets of blank paper, on which was written "Dupe!"—Ib.

The Queen's Bed.—The visitors at Buckingham palace, who have an opportunity of seeing the Queen's bed, and who are accustomed to conclude that royalty must repose on feather beds and downy pillows, will be astonished to have pointed out to them a small camp bed, with a hard mattress, and one small pillow, as the couch of royalty: but such is the fact. If ladies generally would follow her majesty's example, they would feel the benefit of it in the improvement of their persons and figure, and in the flow of of health and spirits it would secure.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, November 6, 1838.

"I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man."
THOMAS JEFFERSON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN,

That application will be made to the present session of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey for an act making a new County from the eastern part of Essex county, the northern part of Middlesex, and the south-eastern part of Somerset, and probably the southern part of Morris county.

Plainfield, Nov. 5th, 1838. 94 6w

We give publicity to the above notice with pleasure. It has engaged the attention of the people hereabout for some time, and is not only desirable, but what, we feel confident, we are fully entitled to.

New Jersey Congressional Election decided at last! The whole Whig Delegation have received the Certificates!!

The Governor and Privy council had a final meeting, on Wednesday last, for the decision of this vexed and long doubtful question; and on counting all the votes before them from the several counties in the state, gave the following result

Randolph,	28,283
Stratton,	28,252
Maxwell,	28,239
Halsted,	28,192
Yorke,	28,177
Ayorigg,	28,150
Vroom,	27,990
Cooper,	27,954
Dickerson,	27,951
Ryall,	27,939
Rille,	27,924
Force,	26,813

That is the six whig candidates are elected by an average majority of 275.

This does not include the votes of Millville, in Cumberland county, which gave an administration majority of 106; and does not include the votes of South Amboy, in Middlesex county, which gave an administration majority of 152. Had they been added the returns would have been as before given in this paper.

As respects Millville, the return was handed by the town clerk to the county clerk, without a seal, and on that account the Cumberland county clerk rejected it, and sent the returns of the county, Millville omitted, to the governor at Trenton. The clerk of Middlesex county, for similar and other additional reasons rejected the votes of South Amboy in his returns to Trenton. This is the cause of all the difficulty, and the reason the decision has been so long delayed. The whole blame, both as respects the delay and the result, if blame there be, belongs to the town or county clerks exclusively, and not to the governor and privy council.

On Tuesday last, Gen. Wall, administration Senator from this state, appeared before the Governor and Privy Council in behalf of the administration candidates, and in a long and talented speech, argued that it was the duty of the Governor and Privy Council to go behind the returns of the county clerks, and inquire whether and why any townships were omitted. On Wednesday, a very able and conclusive opinion from the Governor was received and read, in which it was stated that the Governor and Privy Council could not lawfully decide who were properly elected to Congress, that that duty belonged solely to the House of Representatives, that the duty by law to the mere casting up of the votes presented to them,—and that if any votes were improperly omitted, or any member was unjustly deprived of his seat, the House of Representatives alone had full power to set the matter right. Accordingly, the council thus decided, and cast up the votes only that were before them, with the result above given, referring the whole matter to Congress.

The probability is that the House of Representatives will admit to the seats, three of each party, or five of the administration candidates, and one whig.

The Governor's Message.—We have this document in our paper this week, though it takes up much room, because it is so exactly of such interest to the citizens of this state, and all of both parties would wish to read it. Of it, the New Brunswick Fredonian says:

"It is a plain, sound, sensible, practical document—precisely such as the times called for, and very appropriate to the occasion. No one can fail to be convinced of the uprightness of the intentions, and the sincerity of the views and opinions of the writer. And that few, we should think, will be found to question the justness and propriety of those views and opinions.

"The plain and explicit statement of the governor in relation to the financial condition of the State, and the necessity that existed for providing a current revenue to meet the current expenditures, leaves those without excuse who have labored to make it appear that the tax of the present year was unusual or unnecessary.

The Newark Eagle says of the same document:

The message of Gov. Pennington is quite different from the annual messages we have heretofore been in the habit of publishing at the opening of a new Legislative session. It is almost exclusively devoted to party politics, and for ourselves we do not believe that Gov. Pennington ever wrote it. We can in no way reconcile his general deportment and conversation with the sentiments of this message without imputing to him hypocrisy and a want of sincerity in his general intercourse. We are rather inclined to the opinion that he has entrusted the matter to the President of the Morris Canal and Banking Company, who felt the necessity of making it agree with the sentiments of master Biddle. As a citizen of the state we feel mortified that the governor of the state of New Jersey should descend to sanction such a production for his annual message."

Pennsylvania Legislature.—The whig papers claim that the Legislature of Pennsylvania will stand as follows:—In the Senate, 24 whigs and 9 administration men, and in the lower house, 53 whigs to 47 Van Buren men,—which gives to the whigs a majority of 21 on joint ballot.

The administration papers claim that it will stand thus:—In the senate, whig majority 2, and in the lower house, administration majority 14,—which gives an administration majority on joint ballot of 12.

A United States Senator is to be chosen by this Legislature, so it is important to know which of the two parties has the majority, and it will be known in the course of the winter. In that state as well as in our own, many of the election returns will be contested.

☞ A most blameworthy and foul transaction, too bad for belief is said to have occurred in Saddle River township, Bergen county, at the late election. Thirty-two individuals have sworn before a Justice that they each voted the Whig ticket, while the returns of the town clerk give only twenty-four whig votes. We earnestly hope there is some mistake about this, for if it be true, the ballot box must have been robbed by respectable men for the despicable gain of only eight votes. The Jerseyman well remarks of this base crime, 'Any man who would do this would steal the coppers from the eyes of his deceased parents.'

The New York Star says that the "Letters from under a Bridge," by N. P. Willis, published in the Mirror, surpass any thing of the kind in the English language, not excepting Charles Lamb's writings in the same pleasing sparkling vein. This is high praise, but not more than Willis deserves—he was always a favorite writer of ours.

The October number of the Knickerbocker contains a review of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, by his son-in-law, Lockhart,—a long and most able article. It is one of the best things of the kind we have ever read, full of interest, and full of instruction, in plain, convincing and powerful language. We suppose it was written by J. F. Cooper, the great American novelist. One such article in every number would be worth more than the price of the Magazine, without taking into consideration the very many other articles of great interest, always to be found in this Magazine.

☞ We much regret to state that there is a strong probability of another Canadian war this winter—and one that will be much more difficult to quell, than the last insurrection. Most extensive preparation are seen now making along our whole northern frontier for an invasion.

Take Notice.

The Stockholders in the building office of the Plainfield Union, are hereby requested to meet at Jacob Thorn's Hotel, on Thursday evening next, 8th inst. at 6 o'clock, on business of importance. All are requested to attend.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

New Jersey Legislature.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 30th and 31st Council was mostly engaged in canvassing the votes for members of Congress, with the governor.

In Assembly, on Wednesday, the Treasurer reported, in compliance with a resolution, that the whole amount of monies paid by the state, in pursuance of the law of the last session to encourage the culture of silk, to be $19.

Nothing of importance was done in Council, Thursday or Friday. Adjourned to Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

Thursday, Nov. 1.

In Assembly, a petition was presented praying for a law to prohibit the holding of Justices' courts in taverns, as injurious to the cause of temperance, justice and honesty, which was referred to the committee on the judiciary.

Friday morning, Nov. 2.

In Assembly, a bill was reported for the support of the government of this state, which was read once, ordered to a second reading and made the order of the day for Tuesday next.

Adjourned to Monday afternoon.

The trial for the contested seats from Cumberland, goes on bravely before the committee.

A new election for member of Congress is to be held in the 4th district in Vermont, on Tuesday next.

Underneath the "College of mines and Civil Engineering," in St. Petersburg, containing about 300 students, is an artificial mine, showing the various strata of all the kinds of earth, rock, and ores, found in the various mines in Siberia, all the materials used in delineating the strata and metals are the natural substances taken from the several mines. This mine, with its shafts and galeries, is of the full working size.

AN OLD ONE.—The Sloop Nancy renewed her register and coasting license to day—she having been built at Pembroke in the year 1797, being now fifty one years old! We doubt whether there are many older vessels, now serviceable in the country.—Bost. Jour.

Another Fatal Steamboat Explosion.—The Grand Gulf Advertiser says the "flues" of the steamer Gov. Shelby "collapsed" near the mouth of the Arkansas and scalded 20 deck passengers, most of them mortally. Where are the steam boat Inspectors? This is the first fatal explosion since the law of Congress passed "Collapsing flues" in a soft expression, by which owners of boats mean burning boilers."

Canada Proclamations.—Sir George Arthur has issued a proclamation at Toronto announcing that certain information had been received of an extensive conspiracy in the United States against Canada, and that there are among them some British subjects who will not be really seduced from their allegiance.

Declarations of attainder have been issued against about 100 of the old insurgents, who were indicted for treason, and escaped to the United States, among whom are McKenzie, Ralph, &c.

Quicksilver Mine.—We are informed by Mr. Cooper, that in boring near this place, through the soft stone upon which this region is based, his augur, at the distance of several hundred feet from the surface, dropped into a lake of quick silver; 14 ft. and some inches deep.—Marengo (Ala.) Gaz.

Stoves,

Cheaper than ever!

J. THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally, that they have now on hand a large assortment of stoves of the most approved patterns, to burning coal or wood; and as they intend to close their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they were ever before offered in this market. Their assortment consists of Stoves called Salaters, Powhatans, Chunks & Stanley's James', and all sizes of the nice plate.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low: they consist chiefly of Pawley's, Clussman's, Lyne's, James', Onley's, Wilsons, Gills' and Nine Plates: they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat; we shall only, that they are now made handsomer and stronger than ever: and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume

OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

A finish'd specimen of Chalcography, (proof the American press, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume: besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—criticisms upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events—remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, me chanics, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, at the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Epes Sargent, who will continue, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In short, the interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors: and it is universally admitted that no work extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of entertainment, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the sedentary student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vitiate a pleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form with brevier, minion, and nonpareil type. It is published once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, &c. For what volume an engraving, Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded to subscribers in any part of the United States, by the early conveyance. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the useful branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ess and impartiality, but without harshness. Its e ief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provision are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, duri g the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May, —the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing, fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Pedlars and ice furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire. The school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected to be over at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The cities of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can each be reached in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber's desire a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its co tinuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole of the commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to leave my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge on the other, I would decide—I would choose this work by Dr. Jenks."

The great and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. Its a work of singularly great value in the private christian and to heads of families and ministers, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading—and particularly applicable to the wants of B. Schools, teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate the Bible manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—"this will worthy a place in every family library."

Dr. Alexander says—"The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

SHEWEL'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Measles, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c. &c. and they are found to be a powerful remedy in removing the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say from what I have seen of them, are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use. I feel under the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can safely say that I believe them to be a safe, valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. I have recommended them to many complaints as recommended, especially for assemblee worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with, and after taking one box and a half of your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and in very good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them. I believe them for any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick headache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no other for moral worth and disinterested patriotism, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently conceived and faithfully carried out, to be the true preservation of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and triumphant success.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to a sixth copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired.

All unchosized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

But not less decision has been displayed by men of virtue. In this distinction no man ever exceeded, for instance, or ever will exceed, the late illustrious Howard.

The energy of his determination was so great that if, instead of being habitual, it had been shewn only for a short time on particular occasions, it would have appeared a vehement impetuosity; but by being uninterrupted, it had an invisibility of manner which scarcely appeared to exceed the tone of a calm constancy. It was so totally the reverse of any thing like turbulence or agitation. It was the calmness of an intensity kept uniform by the nature of the human mind forbidding it to be more, and by the character of the individual forbidding it to be less. The habitual passion of his mind was a measure of feeling almost equal to the temporary extremes and paroxysms of common minds: as a great river, in its customary state, is equal to a small or moderate one when swollen to a torrent.

The moment of finishing his plans in deliberation, and commencing them in action was the same. I wonder what must have been the amount of that bribe in emolument or pleasure, that would have detained him a week inactive after their final adjustment. The law which carries water down a declivity, was not more unconquerable and invariable than the determination of his feelings toward the main object. The importance of this object held his faculties in a state of excitement which was too rigid to be affected by lighter interests, on which therefore the beauties of nature and of art had no power. He had no leisure feeling which he could spare to be diverted among the innumerable varieties of the extensive scenes which he traversed; all his subordinate feelings lost their seperate existence and operation, by falling into the grand one. There have not been wanting trivial minds, to mark this as a flaw in his character. But the mere men of taste ought to be silent respecting such a man as Howard; he is above their sphere of judgment. The invisible spirits, who fulfil their commission of philanthropy among mortals, do not care about pictures, statues and sumptuous buildings; and no more did he, when the time in which he must have inspected and admired them, would have been taken from the work to which he had consecrated his life. The intricacy which he might feel, was reduced to wait till the hour should arrive, when its gratification should be presented by conscience, which kept a scrupulous charge of all his time, as the most sacred duty of that hour. If he was still at every hour, when it came, fated to feel the attractions of the fine arts but the second claim, they might be sure of their revenge; for no other man will ever visit Rome under such a despotic consciousness of duty as to confine himself time for surveying the magnificence of its ruins. Such an agreement is too far beyond the reach of common sainship to commit. It implied an inconceivable severesty of conviction, that he had one thing to do, and that he who would do some great thing in this short life, must apply himself to the work with such a concentration of his forces, as, to idle spectators who live only to amuse themselves looks like insanity.

His attention was so strongly and tenaciously fixed on his object, that even at the greatest distance, as the Egyptian pyramids to travellers, it appeared to him with a luminous distinctness as if it had been nigh, and beguiled the toilsome length of labor and enterprise by which he was to reach it. It was so conspicuous before him, that not a step deviated from the direction, and every movement and every day was an approximation. As his method referred every thing he did and thought to the end, and as his exertion did not relax for a moment, he made the trial, so seldom made, what is the utmost effect which may be granted to the last possible effort of a human agent; and therefore what he did not accomplish he might conclude to be placed beyond the sphere of mortal activity, and calmly leave to the immediate disposal of Omnipotence.

Unless the eternal happiness of mankind be an insignificant concern, and the passion to promote it an ing lorious distinction, I may cite George Whitefield, as a noble instance of this attribute of the decisive character, this intense necessity of action. The great cause which was so languid a thing in the hands of many of its advocates, assumed in his administrations an unmitigable urgency.

Many of the christian missionaries among the heathens, such as Brainerd, Elliot and Schwartz, have displayed memorable examples of this dedication of their whole being to their office, this eternal abjuration of all the quiescent feelings.

This would be the proper place for introducing (if I did not hesitate to introduce in any connexion with merely human instances) the example of him who said, "I must be about my Father's business. My meat and drink is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work. I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how I am straitened till it be accomplished."

Jew d'Esprit.—A fellow the other day sold some clothing to a Jew. After the sale had been concluded, he said to him: "Do you know they hang a Jew and a jackass together on the gallows in England?" "Well, no;" was the rejoinder; "but ain't it blessing them both of a sin? there seeming that they might hang one on account of his nation, and the other on account of his ass."

From the Cottage Magazine.

Extraordinary Providence,

Thomas Hownham, the subject of the following providence, was a very poor man, who lived in a lone house or hut upon a moor, called Barmour Moor, about a mile from Lowick and two miles from Doddington, in the county of Northumberland. He had several sons to support a wife and two young children save the scanty earnings obtained by keeping an ass, on which he used to carry coals from Darmour coal hill to Doddington and Wooler; or by making brooms on the heath, and selling them round the country. Yet poor, and despised as he was in consequence of his poverty, in my forty years acquaintance with the professing world, I have scarce met with his equal, as a man that lived near to God, or one who has favored with more evident answers to prayer. My parents then living at a village called Hanging Hall, about 1 mile and a half from and Wooler; or by making brooms on the heath, and selling them round the country. Yet poor, and despised as he was in consequence of his poverty, in my forty years acquaintance with the professing world, I have scarce met with his equal, as a man that lived near to God, or one who has favored with more evident answers to prayer. My parents then living at a village called Hanging Hall, about 1 mile and a half from his hut, I had frequently interviews with him, in one of which he was solicitous to know whether my father or mother had sent him any unexpected relief the night before. I answered him in the negative so far as I knew; at which he seemed to be uneasy. I then pressed to know what relief he had met with and how? After requesting secrecy unless I should hear it from some other quarter, (and if so he begged I would acquaint him,) he proceeded to inform me that, being disappointed in receiving money for his coals the day before, he returned home in the evening, and to his pain and distress found that there was neither bread nor meal, nor any thing to supply their place in the house; that his wife wept sore for the poor children, who were both to bed, and their mother with them, who likewise soon went to sleep—being worn out with their sufferings of the children and her own tender feelings.

Being a fine moonlight night, he went out of the house to a retired spot a little distance, for to meditate on these remarkable expressions in Heb. 3: 17, 18: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines—the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat—the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herb in the stall—yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." Here he continued, as he thought, about an hour and a half;—and in a sweet, serene, and composed frame of mind he returned into the house; when, by the light of the moon through the window, he perceived something upon a stool or form (for chairs they had none) before the bed; and after viewing it with astonishment, and feeling it by it, it to be a joint of meat roasted, and a loaf of bread about the size of our half peck loaves.—He then went to the door to look if he could see any body; and after using his voice as well as his eyes, and neither perceiving nor hearing any one, he returned in, awoke his wife, who was still asleep, asked a blessing, and then awoke the children, and gave them a comfortable repast. Such was their history; but he could give me no further account.

I related this extraordinary affair to my father and mother, who heard it with astonishment, but ordered me to keep it a secret as requested, and such it would have remained but for the following reason: A short time after this event, I left that country; but on a visit 12 years after, at a friend's the conversation one evening, took a turn about one Mr. Strangeways, commonly called Strangeage, a farmer, who lived at Lowick high in rent, whom the people named Pinch-meager, on account of the miserable wretch she dwelt there. I asked what had become of his property, as I apprehended he had never done one generous action in his life time. An elderly woman in the company said I was mistaken, for she could relate one which was somewhat curious. She said that she had lived with him as a servant or housekeeper; that about twelve or thirteen years ago, one Thursday morning, he ordered her to bake a whole joint of meat roasted having given her directions a day or two before to bake two large loaves of white bread. He then went to Wooler market, and took a bit of bread and cheese in his pocket as usual. He came home in the evening in a very bad humor, and went soon to bed, in about two hours after he called up his man servant, and ordered him to take one of the loaves and the joint of meat and carry them down to the moor to Thomas Hownham's and leave them there. The man did so, and finding the family asleep, he set them at the bed side and came away.

The next morning her master called her and the man servant in and seemed in great agitation of mind. He told them that he intended to have invited Mr. John Mool, with two or three more neighbouring farmers, (who were always treating him for his meanness) to sup with him the night before; that he would not invite them in the morning, as he proposed to take them by surprise near home, as two or three of them lived in the house but a small shower of rain coming on, they rode and left him before he could get an opportunity, that going soon to bed, he did not rest well, full of dreaming, and thought he saw Hownham's wife and children dying of hunger; that he awoke and put off the impression; that he dreamed the second time, and endeavored again to shake it off; but that he was altogether overcome with the pressure the third time; but that since he was so loth as to send the meat and bread he could not forbear, and charged her and the man never to speak of it, or he would turn them away directly. She added that since Hownham's wife died long ago, she thought she might relate it as a proof that he had done one generous action though he was grieved for it afterwards.

Surely this was a wonderful instance of God's special interposition in behalf of his own children—plainly showing us that when he becomes the God of grace, he also becomes, in a peculiar manner, the God of Providence to his people. The infidel or sceptic may assert that the above account is incredible, and denounce it as a fiction got up by some fanatic or enthusiast; and, alas! the worldly minded and formal professors of christianity will be apt to join both the former in his ridicule; or, at any rate, may say, this is carrying the doctrine of God's particular providence rather too far; but the sincere and genuine christian will be prompted to say, this affecting story is a higher and holy admiration of that gracious God and Father, who feedeth the young ravens when they call upon him, and therefore can give bread to his people, and supply their wants in a way which shall call forth the deepest gratitude and add to his glory. Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all other things (needful) shall be added unto you, and 'they that fear the Lord shall not want any good thing.'

"Let's Wife."—Mr. Colman, in his Agricultural address last week, thus stated the folly of modern fashionable female education:

A young man who had for a long while remained in that useless state designated by "a half pair of scissors," at last seriously determined he would procure him a wife. He got the 'refusal' of one who was beautiful and fashionably accomplished, and took her on trial to his home. Soon learning that she knew nothing, rather how to darn a stocking, or boil a potatoe, or roast a bit of beef, he returned her to her father's house as having been weighed in the balances and found wanting. A suit was commenced by the good lady, but the husband alleged that she was not "up to the sample," and of course the obligation to retain the commodity was not binding. The jury inflicted a fine of a few dollars, but he would have given a fortune rather than not be liberated from such an irksome engagement. "As well might the farmer have thrown the original trade-Mule placed in his kitchen," said the orator, "as some of the modern fashionable women." "Let's feed," continued he, "it won't be much better to have Lot's wife standing there," for she might answer some useful purpose. She might salt his bacon!"—Northampton Courier.

New England.—The following beautiful and just compliment to New England was pronounced by the Hon. Wm. Slocumb, of North Carolina, in the course of a speech delivered in the United States House of Representatives during the late session.

"Did I believe it essential to the prosperity or welfare of the Southern States, that the manufactories of the North should be levelled with the dust, it would be an unpleasant duty to vote a benefit to myself which would be an entire ruin to others. A few summers ago, while flying from the demon of ill-health, I visited New England. I found her towns and villages crowded with an industrious and enterprising population, her hills and valleys redolent with health, prosperity and contentment; every mind seemed to be intent, every head was occupied; the world does not contain a more free and happy community. There the advantages of education are extended to the poorest individual in society, and that society receives its remuneration in its sober, industrious, and economical habits. If Plato were alive he would no longer draw upon his imagination for a specimen of a perfect Republic; he would there find a community, in which the humblest individual had the same vote with his more wealthy neighbor, in laying the public burdens for the public welfare. I asked myself if it were possible that the prosperity of an artificial system, or rather if it were not the result of a long established habit of an industry that never tired—of an economy that never slept. I looked upon the scene around me with no feeling of murmuring discontent—I felt more rejoiced because it was a part of my country."

On the maxim that every man's house is his castle, Lord Chatham made the following beautiful remarks:—"The poorest man in his cottage bids defiance to all the forces of the crown. It may be frail—its roof may shake—the wind blow through it—the storm may enter—the wind may enter—but the king of England cannot enter! All his power dare not cross the threshold of that ruined tenement!"

Good nature is the best feature in the finest face—will may raise admiration, judgement command respect, and knowledge emotion. Beauty may inflame the heart with love, but good nature is a more powerful influence. It adds a thousand attractions to the charms of beauty, and gives an air of beneficence to the most homely face.

Not Bad.—At a late assize in Ireland, two men were condemned to be hanged. On receiving the sentence, one of them addressed the Judge and said that he had but two favors to ask him. What are they? inquired his lordship. "First, my lord, your honor," said pat, "will you let me hang this man before I hang myself?" What is the other request? said the Judge. "Why, please your honor, will you let my wife hang me for she will do it more tenderly than the hangman—and then what she receives for the job will help the poor creature to pay her rent."

The new steamboat Illinois, on Lake Erie, accommodates 1000 passengers.

Dutton Corn and Rohan Potatoes.—The following agricultural information may be gratifying to your numerous country friends. In a letter just received from Judge Beal, the editor of the Cultivator, of Albany, that gentleman says:

"My crop of Dutton corn this year, yielded from 110 to 120 bushels of shelled corn to the acre.

Speaking of the Rohan potato, the Judge says "I dug myself, in one hour, the tops being pulled, twenty seven bushels. A man may easily dig 100 bushels a day. As but 2 eyes are planted in a hill, and some potatoes have 40 to 50 eyes, the economy in seed, you will perceive is immense. My yield was at the rate of about 370 bushels to the acre, notwithstanding the drought.

According to this, two eyes to the hill, and the hills 3 feet apart each way, it will require only about 7 bushels to plant an acre, as a bushel averages 1480 eyes. Of the qualities of the Rohan potatoes Judge Beal says: 'We cannot judge so well of the qualities for the table, never having tasted of but one, we should class it second, tho' others class it first, among our good northern potatoes. According to the seed sown, we have no hesitation in saying that it is the most productive of any variety we know."

Recipe for the Fever and Ague.—As soon as the ice is out of the river, buy yourself an old skiff, take part in a seine, and go a-fishing on shares. Stand half-leg deep in water for six weeks in succession, with two inches cat-fish slime on your trousers, and bathe the inside with new whiskey, to keep it from striking to your stomach. Put up a couple of barrels of cat-fish for family's use—slight sprinkling of salt, plenty of Maumee water—that's pretty strong, especially at this season of the year. Take plenty of fresh air especially nights; and if you can't get to sleep in the big government purchase, take a sleeping apartment with only two sides, and neither top nor bottom. By and by the cat fish begin to show their strength—a sprinkling more salt, plenty more Maumee water—strong smell's very healthy. Eat plenty of cat fish broth and go a coonin' a nights for exercise. Weather begins to grow hot; good plan to get asleep under the shade of a tree, and let the sun come round and catch you at it. Eyes begin to look yellow; mouth tastes bad; Maumee water don't sit well; tongue furred; fever; doctor; drugs and so on. Get better; more cat-fish broth, a mixture of green corn, buttermilk and plenty of new whiskey. Bowels out of order; physick out with muskmelons; begin to feel scaly; heels running up to seed; clothes grow too large; body sharpened and almost ready to drive down; take more buttermilk and lie down on the sunny side of a haystack, and in half an hour, shake like a lamb's tail. Proper bad country!—Maumee Express.

One of the happiest instances of imperturbability which ever came to our knowledge is that of one of our western negroes. A steamboat was lately pushing ahead down the river, when a skiff, in which a negro man and woman were seated, started out from the Kentucky shore, apparently for the purpose of disposing of some articles of fruit. As they approached and hailed the steamer, those having charge exhibited no disposition to stop. The negro, determined to get on board, rowed directly under the bow. As it was seen that the skiff must be inevitably run over, the bell was rung and the engine stopped. As the two boats came in contact, the negro, a fellow of singular agility, watched the opportunity, and seizing hold of something which offered, safely threw himself in an instant upon the deck, while the skiff and negro girl as quickly disappeared beneath the steamer. Without uttering a syllable, the negro walked to the furnace, turned his back, deliberately parted the skirts of his coat, and exclaimed with unchanging gravity, "Thunder, how the old woman will swear when we get ashore again." The above is true to the letter.—Cincinnati News.

Transportation.—An old convict ordered his son to turn out the saddle and hang up the mare. Said he to a neighbor, "When I came home yesterday, I found my wife sour, and the doors sick a bed; the gate had left the boy open, and the field was in the hogs; so I caught up a hog and broke it over every rail's back in the field, and every pumpkin took up a hog and run!"

We have heard of a man who is so tall that his pantaloons have to be wove in a rope walk. He folds up like a two foot rule, and has to get on his knees to put his hands in his pockets.

Opium vendors of Constantinople.—Talking of drinking and dramming, puts me in mind of the opium eaters, on a number of whom the sultan played a capital trick some time back. He was passing through a quarter of the city where they sold the noxious drug, and the thought struck him that, as the father of his people, he was bound to put a stop to so pernicious a practice so, without much more'ado, he pulled down all the shops, over the site of which I have several times had the honor of walking, and sent every single soul he found in them to the madhouse, which happened to be close by; and there they remained with iron collars around their necks, tod chained to the walls for two or three months, at the end of which time his sublime highness let them out on their solemn promise never to go mad any more. —Capt. Ross' Three month's Leave.

Extracts,
From a Poetical Epistle to a Friend.

[Thoughts on the First Snow Storm]

Beloved summer!—nature's dearest friend!
Friend of my heart—now surely thou hast fled!
I knew thou wert departing—but then came
Autumn so wily, and stole one by one,
Thy beauteous charms, that with deluded hope,
I still clung fondly to these—but 'tis past!
There's no delusion here—winter is crowned.
With pomp and power he comes! dark angry clouds,
And whitened sun, and winds tempestuous, mark
His coming;—icy chains and frozen breath,
Are his attendants. Nature, ah how sad!
These rich green boughs, through which the summer breeze
So lightly played, and where the feathered tribe
Made their soft nests, will lift themselves to heaven,
All sere and stricken, seeming to implore
The eye of pity: murmuring rills will cease
To warble their heart, with their soft melody;
And ocean's waves will fade from off the sky.
Ah me! Cease now my kind and gentle muse—
Forbear to touch that keener sense of soul!
And let me turn from this absorbing theme.

[The Christian should 'rejoice always.']

How can we sigh, and ever be cast down,
Who look above, for an immortal crown!
We, who are ransomed from the dark abode
Of sin, and made joint heirs with Christ, our God,
To an inheritance, most blessed, pure,
That will through all eternity endure!
What if our leader takes us through a road
Beset with thorns! It was the path he trod!
Ah! deeper still, the path for us he bore:
Then let us be submissive, and adore.
If sin is conquered, and we reach at last
Our home on high, danger and sorrow past,
How sweet with him to trace our pathway here,
And have each step that now seems dark, made clear!
Then shall we see that in no other way,
Could we have triumphed, in that glorious day.
What fervent songs of gratitude will rise
To him who bought, and helped us gain the prize!
Notes full of joy and love, will echo then,
For every trial we are called to bear.
Then let us now look upward and be still—
Happy to do, and suffer all his will.

Missionary Hymn.

[Written for the Plainfield Musical Association.]

Christians! ye who unmolested
Worship 'neath your native vines;
Who the Gospel worth have tested,
By the light which round you shines!
Oh! behold the darkness covering
Regions o'er the swelling tide,
Where no wing of mercy hovering,
Scatters blessings far and wide!

See, O see! the strange delusion
Which immortal minds doth chain,
Where no gospel's blest infusion,
Freedom sheds, o'er hill and plain!
See! the land which nature blesseth,
With her balmy breath and smiles,
Pleaty, but no peace possesseth,
Captive led by Satan's wiles!

Christians! yours it is to banish
Mists from heathen nations far;
Error's shades will quickly vanish,
At the gospel's glorious car!
Speed ye then, O speed its motion,
O'er the waste of waters wide!
Where the sunny isles of ocean,
Wait for blessings long denied.

Haste, the "bread of life" to send them;
Let the man of God go forth!
While unceasing prayers attend them,
In their wanderings through the earth:
And, while from the fig-tree's shadow,
Thro' the grove, Christ's message wings;
Here, be gifts from vale and meadow,
Tribute, which the Christian brings.

I Love the Sea.

I love the sea,
The blue, the free,
The roar of its mighty minstrelsy:
The foam of its waves,
That madly raves,
In the dearest sight my bosom craves.

With thee, my bark,
O'er the waters dark,
With the summer moon our course to mark:
How proud we ride,
O'er the dashing tide,
While the white foam leaves thy heaving side.

We cut our way
Through the shining spray,
While the crowding billows round us lay:
And, our theme of glee,
Rung wild and free,
On the mighty waste of the boundless sea.

The mariner's dirge,
Shall never be sung
As it rings its knell on the grave's dark verge:
And his last long sleep,
In the quiet deep,
Is as calm as when withers'd or blossoming.

I love the sea,
The blue, the free,
And the roar of its mighty minstrelsy:
Where the wild waves roam,
In their caves of foam,
The mariner finds his chosen home.

Then spread thy wing,
And far o'er the waves like a sea-gull spring:
Our trust on high,
In the smiling sky,
And we rove 'neath the light of a watching eye.

The following account of a Splendid Rail road Opening is copied from a late London paper. Only think of a train of Cars one mile and a half long!

OPENING OF THE NEWCASTLE AND CARLISLE RAILWAY.—On Monday the opening of the railway took place with considerable ceremony and festivity. The distance of the line from Newcastle to the Canal Basin, at Carlisle, is 61 miles. "The anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, which crowned the British arms with success and restored peace to Europe," says the "Tyne Mercury," was selected as the day on which to celebrate the event, and one of the engines is named the Well ington. Different portions of the Railway have been opened from time to time, and made available to the commerce of the north but on Monday the whole line was passed over for the first time.

The engines started in the following order; First the Rapid, as an advanced guard, and without any train, displaying the union jack, which has so long "braved the battle and the breeze;" next, the Meteor, with four carriages and a flag, on which was inscribed, "England expects every man to do his duty." In this train we observed the Mayor of Newcastle and his friends, and the Allendeads band: then followed the Victoria with nine carriages, the Wellington with nine, and the Nelson with seven, the Lightning with ten, and the Carlisle band; next the Tyne with its steam organ and nine carriages; after these came the Carlisle with eight, the Eden with ten, the Goliath with nineteen and about 600 passengers; then the Atlas with seventeen, next the Samson with eleven; in this train there were very few passengers, but it was succeeded by the "New Castle," with nine carriages well filled and a flag hoisted "Prosperity to New Castle, followed by the Hercules, the last of the list with eight carriages. The aggregate number of passengers in all the trains, upon a fair computation, exceeded 3,500, and at the proper time previous to starting reached nearly half a mile, but when in motion could not be less than one mile and a half, allowing as much space between each train as was consistent with safety.

Apprentices.—When serving your apprenticeship you will have time and opportunity to stock your minds with useful knowledge. The only way for a young man to prepare himself for future usefulness, is to devote himself to study during his leisure hours. First by industry in business—never complain that you have to work; go to it with alacrity and cheerfulness and it will become a habit which will make you respected and beloved by your master and employer, make it your business to see and promote his interest; by taking care of his you will learn to take care of your own.

Young men at the present day are too fond of getting out of work, they seek for easy and lazy employments, and frequently turn out to be miserable vagabonds. You must avoid wishes to live without labor which is a blessing instead of a curse—it makes men healthy, it procures them food, clothing, and every other blessing, and frees them from temptation to be dishonest.—American Presbyterian.

Russia before the World.—A mechanic in Russia has succeeded in making a steam man. It is probably one of the most interesting experiments ever offered to the world. It is a large colossal statue the feet of which are placed upon wheels on a rail road; and as he goes thundering over the course, the steam comes puffing out of his nostrils in a manner to give the appearance of Satan.

A correspondence between a Yankee school master in Mississippi and his mother in Maine:

May 15th, 1838.

Dear Son—Come home. A rolling stone gathers no moss.
Your affectionate mother, till death.

July 4th, 1838.

Dear Mother—I went. Come here. A rolling log never gets fat.
Your dutiful and affectionate son.

Test of Integrity—CONSTANTINE, when he was chosen Emperor, found several christians in office, and issued an edict, requiring them to renounce their faith or quit their places. Most of them gave up their offices to preserve their consciences, but some of them resigned and renounced Christianity. When the emperor had made full proof of their dispositions and characters, he removed all who had thus basely complied with his supposed wishes, and retained the others, saying that those who would desert or deny their Divine Master would desert him, and were not worthy of his confidence.

Napoleon's Widow.—In the account of the coronation of the Emperor of Austria, as king of Lombardy we find the following short notice: Maria Louisa, the widow of Napoleon!

In the State carriage next to that of the emperor, was the widow of Napoleon, Maria Louisa. Her full form, ample countenance, and careless or contented expression would seem to indicate that the vicissitudes of life have passed over her without leaving any deep traces or enduring recollections behind. She is now the wife we believe, of some German nobleman, and follows joyfully in the train of the legitimates wherever they move.

REPORT of KEEPER of STATE PRISON.

To his Excellency the Governor of the State of New-Jersey.

SIR—I have received from the Inspectors my duty to lay before you the statement of the affairs of the State Penitentiary. You will remember, last year the committee of accounts of the prison showed a balance in favor of its operations, after paying all its expenses of $174,31. They then cautioned the public against expecting the same result in the coming year, inasmuch as the contracts would be much lower for the labor of the convicts.

In the weaving department, alone, the prices for weaving charged to the contractor has been reduced one fifth in this year: and it will remember that we were visited in the fore part of this year with the small pox, which prevented some of our best workmen from labor for a considerable time, and our customers from bringing their work, as usual to the prison. Notwithstanding all these difficulties, the operations of the prison will show as well the year as the former one. We had, on the 1st of October, 1837, 141 prisoners. We had received 73, and discharged 56 (four of which have died) which leaves us 163 on the 1st of October, 1838, which is the greatest number ever before reported to have been, at one time, in the New Jersey Prison; and if the number increases in the same ratio in the coming year, we shall be in want of more cells, and it will become necessary to build another block.

The prison and out-grounds are nearly completed. No further appropriation will be necessary except to pay some debts now due, the amount of which will be presented to the committee on accounts. The balance in favor of the operations of the prison for the present year, will be about the same as the former, or a little over; and we hope the day is not far distant when there will be a more healthy state of affairs in the mechanical operations of our country, that will enable us to realize a fair compensation for convict labor, and enable the convict in all cases, to pay the costs of conviction, as well as the expenses of the prison.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH A. YARD, Keeper.

October 1, 1838.

The Fair of the American Institute closes this evening with an address by the President, Gen. Tallmadge. Among the most remarkable of the Machines exhibited is a Shingle maker, which consists of an upright wheel made of planks, with two knives upon its surface, diverging a little in opposite directions. When the wheel is set in rapid motion and a block of wood applied, each knife strikes off a finished shingle, and the next point changing up and down alternately, so that each revolution of the wheel makes two finished shingles, and they fly out of the hopper like a flock of pigeons. The result is, the production of nine hundred shingles a minute.

The Journal of Commerce—the best authority in statistics—estimates that "it would prepare shingles enough to shingle the canopy of our planet, in a little while."

Machines are erected for rails with less expedition by another machine; and the pill-maker throws out "hundreds of thousand in almost no time," according to the same authority. And neat housekeepers will be glad to hear that Hughes, of New Haven, has contrived a sort of rotary grate by which ashes are shaken out without escaping into the room, and in rekindling the fire, it is only necessary to place kindlings on the top, and then roll the grate bottom upward.

OUTRAGE.—Youthful Depravity.—The Columbia (Pa.) Courant says:—"A dreadful outrage was committed in this borough yesterday morning about 6 o'clock, by a colored boy, aged about 12 years. He had been requested to do something by his sister, a girl about 16 years old, which he refused. She then threatened to whip him, upon which he went into another room, got his fathers gun and deliberately shot her. The shot entered her face and neck, nearly or quite destroying one eye, and otherwise mangling and mangling her. Her recovery is considered doubtful.

WISCONSIN.—The corn crop of this territory, says the Prairie Beacon, is unusually abundant. The quantity of wheat raised is at least ten times greater than ever before; the average yield has been about twenty bushels to the acre. A farmer of Fond du Lac raised from one grain of wheat seventy heads, averging sixty grains a head, and making in all forty two hundred grains. A correspondent of the N. Y. Evening Post says that the present season has been a perfectly healthy throughout this territory. There was no fever and-ague at Milwaukie and its vicinity; and no fevers have prevailed there the past summer and the present autumn.

The Potatoe Trade.—The Massachusetts and New Hampshire papers inform us that large quantities of Potatoes have been shipped to most of the sea port towns for southern states. The Portsmouth Gazette says, ten thousand bushels of potatoes have already been shipped from that port to the south. They sell common at 40 cts. and Chenangoes at 50. Back in the country 20 or 30 miles the Gazette says they turn out well. The Bath Telegraph says that a greater quantity of potatoes than ever before known, has been shipped from that place and the towns above during the last fortnight, for southern ports. They are worth there from 30 to 40 cents per bushel. The Telegraph estimates that upwards of $300,000 will be expended in the state in the purchase of potatoes for shipment.

One hundred and thirty bushels of potatoes were raised on a lot, 80 feet by 120, of Mr. Lemuel Wilkins in this place! Fifty bushels of these potatoes were dug, on a wager, by a Mr. Wilmington, in 4 hours and 12 minutes!—Green Bay Democrat.

New-York Election.

Full returns have not yet been received, but so far as received, is to the whigs extremely favorable.

In New York city, the whigs have elected the whole 13 members of the state legislature, and the 4 members of Congress, being a whig gain of 2-one of them being in the place of C. C. Cambreleng, who has been a representative in congress from the city for twenty years. The city has given a majority of about 1000 for Seward, the whig candidate for governor.

The whigs have gained a congressman in Dutchess county.

Also one in Albany county.

Also one in Schenectady and Saratoga.

Also one in Ulster and Sullivan counties.

The members of Congress ascertained to be elected are as follows,—the whigs being in italic, 1st district,—Thomas B. Jackson,

2d.—James de la Montanye,

3d.—Ogden Hoffman,

Edward Curtiss;

Morse H. Grinnell, Whig gain,

James Monroe, Whig gain.

4th.—Governeur Kemble.

5th.—Charles Johnson, Whig gain.

6th.—Nathaniel Jones.

7th.—Rufus Peter, Whig gain.

8th.—Hiram P. Hunt.

10th.—Daniel D. Barnard, Whig gain.

11th.—Anson Brown, Whig gain.

12th.—David Russell.

13th.—Peter J. Waggoner, Whig gain.

16th.—Andrew W. Doig.

17th.—John G. Floyd.

David P. Brewster.

21st.—John C. Clark, Whig gain.

8 whig gain of 8 whig members. The last delegation was 10 whigs and 30 V. B. men.

In the State senate the administration will have a majority. In the Assembly, probably the whigs will preponderate. As far as heard from, the admin stration have gained 13 members in the Assembly, as compared with last year, but, as compared with 1836, the whigs have gained 38.

New Jersey Legislature.

Tuesday, Nov. 6th.

Council organized as a Court of Appeals.

In Assembly, after some unimportant business, the house went into committee of the whole, Mr. Cassidy of Bergen, in the chair, on the bill for support of Government. The compensation of Speaker of the house, and Vice President of council was fixed at 3,50 per day, and of the members, at 3,00.

In the afternoon, a petition was presented for an amendment of the election laws.

Wednesday, Nov. 7th.

The Vice President laid before council a communication from the Executive of Georgia relative to the refusal of Maine to deliver up certain fugitives from Justice.

In Assembly, the bill for the support of government was passed.

Thursday, Nov. 8.

The Treasurer's report was received.

In Council, the bill for the support of government was passed with amendments.

In Assembly, a joint resolution requiring the late Peter Dickerson and others to the balance of the Surplus Revenue in their hands to the Treasurer was passed.

Friday, Nov. 9th, nothing of importance was done in either house.

New County.

AT a meeting respecting a New County, held at Thos. J. Barr's, at Scotch Plains Nov. 5th 1838, Robt. Anderson was called to the chair and Alex. Wilson chosen Secretary—

1st—It was Resolved—That it is expedient to take immediate measures to ascertain the sentiments of the People interested as to the propriety of applying for a New County to be comprised of the Township of Warren and the lower skirt of Bernards in the county of Somerset—Westfield—New Providence and Rahway in the county of Essex, the N. West skirt of Piscataway and Woodbridge in the county of Middlesex and Long Hill in the county of Morris, or as near to their bounds as the interest of those around shall require.

2d.—Resolved—That a general meeting of the inhabitants of the proposed New County be called by hand bills put up through the region in question and that John Wilson, Abm. Rudyon, Cornelius Boice, John W. Craig and Daniel Shotwell be a Committee for that purpose.

3d.—Resolved—That Andrew Smalley, Daniel Cory, Elias Runyon, Noah Drake, Aballer Ehner, Gideon Reese and John Randolph, be a committee to confer with and ascertain the sentiments of the inhabitants generally especially on the extreme parts of the proposed county—and that Cornelius Boice be a committee to confer with the members of the Legislature from the adjoining counties—and that their proceedings be published in the Plainfield Union.

Insurrection in Canada—It is reported on good authority that the people of Canada have risen very generally, and martial law is again declared throughout those ill-fated provinces. We expect soon to hear of bloodshed.

A Correspondent of the National Intelligencer notices an error common among justices of the peace, of recording oaths as having been made on the "Holy Evangelists"—instead of the "Holy Evangels."—The oaths should be made on the living act as the dead. Most Melancholy Accident.—A very promising son of Capt. Moses about 15 or 16 years of age of the London Packet ship Westminster, was shot a day or two since by the accidental discharge of a gun while on a visit from school, to his home in Lyme Ct. He was shooting ducks and in the act of raising his gun from the bottom of the boat, when the lock came in contact with the thwart, which caused the charge to explode and the contents were lodged in his body. He survived but six hours. What renders the catastrophe peculiarly affecting, his father and mother are now absent in England.—N. York Courier and Enquirer.

The youth alluded to above (John H. Moore) was a member of Green-Brook Family School in Plainfield. From the opening of the present session on the 5th inst. till the unwelcome news of his sudden death, he was confidently expected and impatiently desired by all with whom he parted to enjoy a vacation.

He was generous, affectionate, industrious and docile; and has carried to his early grave the esteem both of his teachers and his fellow students. To say of him in one word all that need be said, he has left in the memory of all who knew him a GOOD NAME. E. P——r.

Stoves,

Cheaper than ever!

J. THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally that they have now on hand a large assortment of Stoves of the most approved patterns, for burning coal or wood; and as they wish to close their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they were ever before offered in this market. Their assortment consists of Stanley's Rotary of all sizes, Pooley's, Church & Sanley's, Tatem's, and all sizes of the same plate.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low; they consist chiefly of Pooley's, Clemmans's, Lyne's, James', Onley's, Wilsons, Gills' and Nine Plates; they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat; we shall only, that they are now made handsomer and better than ever, and will sell them from 10 to 15 percent cheaper than last year.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Worms, Cholera Morbus, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I have acquainted with; they only want a trial to be known to be brought into ge neral use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and belleving that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much opposed, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine: I consider them to be very safe, mild and active combined, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints we recommended, especially for sacharine, by which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the most part, a looseness or diarrhœa, they are a sure and effectual cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral vigor and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatives of our free institutions. For whom, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 20th Day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume: besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and foreign—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions of the fine arts that are presented, for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the noted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, the mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued over the regular subscription list, persons wishing to join with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable as all sums in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of ERAS SANGER, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Dey, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superior, to its predecessors; and it is most confidently trusted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume: and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labor, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament for the mantel-piece of every family—intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the studious student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and to this end we will contain in a single word or sentence that would vibrate a pleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, mid-door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving on steel and every week it has a piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious table of contents. Terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editors. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, &c.

THE Subscriber has on hand a general assortment of well selected articles in his line, which he will sell very low for cash.

☞ Clock and Watch repairing will be strictly attended to.

Those wishing Clocks repaired at their dwellings, will be punctually attended to.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ess and impartiality, but without harshness. Its c ief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its situation and domestic arrangements will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate a pleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex. a retreat without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself that no effort on his part to merit it is continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 19, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

New Cheap Grocery & Shoe Store.

THE Subscriber having just opened a new Store at the House of Samuel L. Pound in Plainfield, on the corner of Main street and Bowery lane, opposite Peace street, where he will be happy to accommodate his friends and the public with the following articles, namely, Molasses, Sugar, Tea, Coffee, Rice, Pepper, Ginger, Spice, Cocoa, Chocolate, Cinnamon, Sal Æratus, Mackerel, Hams, Herring, Soap, Candles, salt, the best of western Flour Gentlemen's and Boy's Boots and Shoes of all kinds.

Also, a good assortment of Ladies' shoes, and many other articles too tedious to mention, all of which may be had cheap for cash or country produce.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

BY MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work:

From W. C. Brownlee:—"We feel to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks, as containing the genuine and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, convenient in size, and sufficiently copious to well supply reading, and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed wood cuts designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a goodly pearl, which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—his well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Wonderful Relic of the Past.—Mr. Buckingham gives the following view of the wonderful ruins of Thebes, in a late lecture on Egypt:

The ruins of Thebes exist in nearly the same proportions, on each side of the Nile. On ascending the river, a numoer of vast temples are seen on the left hand, while on the right are the Catacombs, or tombs of the Kings—and nearly in the centre is the celebrated statue of Memnon.—The principal temple, which has astonished all travellers by its magnitude and beauty, was on the right bank of the Nile. It was dedicated to Jupiter Ammon—is remarkable for the harmony of its proportions—and is placed in the best possible position to be seen, an advantage of which the ancients never lost sight, but which seems to be disregarded in modern days. It is situated at two miles distance from the bank of the Nile, that it might be seen by the voyager at a proper point of view. A flight of massive marble steps leads from the river to the bank, which, when the traveller had ascended, he found himself at the entrance of a wide avenue reaching to the temple, which is lined on both sides for one mile and three quarters with sphynxes, carved out of the solid rock, being each 20 feet high, and standing 60 feet apart. The remainder of the avenue, the other quarter of a mile, was ornamented with statues 60 feet in height, and near the gateway, were two obelisks, each 120 feet high. On passing the doorway, and arriving beneath the portico, the scene was truly magnificent, creating astonishment and inspiring a feeling of awe, not only in the educated traveller, but even in the minds of the Arab guides, who frequently visited the spot. Belzoni and Denon have both described in powerful language, the effect produced upon their feelings, by the extent and sublimity of the prospect around them.

Mr. B. described the magnitude of the portico, and compared it with the portico of the capitol at Washington, which was in due proportion to the body of the building itself. The portico of the Capitol was supported by 24 columns, being double the number ordinarily used—they were each 5 feet in diameter, and presented a most imposing appearance. But in the portico of the temple of Jupiter Ammon, the number of pillars was 144—each was 12 feet in diameter, and stood at least 24 feet apart! In the centre of this portico there was space sufficiently large to contain the whole of the Capitol at Washington, with the adjoining green.

But this vast portico was in proper architectural proportion with the immense building to which it was an entrance—the temple being two miles in length, having been frequently measured.

The vastness of its size struck the beholder with awe, but the decorations in sculpture and painting, on the columns and the walls, doubtless required more labor than even the erection of the temple itself. The whole interior of the walls was covered with mythological figures, which could not be understood at this day, and great and small hieroglyphics, probably many millions in number. These pictoral writings are painted in the most vivid colors, the brilliancy of which continue even to the present time. The outer surface of the walls of the temple is covered with paintings and sculptures of gigantic excellence, representing battle scenes, landscape, &c. of every variety, shewing that period must have possessed much genius and skill. This renown ed temple from its colossal size, and the great number and variety of its decorations, could hardly have been begun and completed during the life-time of one of their kings. It was probably the work of several reigns, and no one could view it, without being forcibly struck with the grandeur and sublimity of its appearance, and filled with admiration at the vastness of the Egyptian architecture.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

SUPPORT YOUR PRESSES.

We cannot too often nor too earnestly impress on our friends the importance of a liberal and generous support of their local journals. It is a duty which we regret to say, is too apt to be neglected—perhaps less now than in former times, but still the evil exists. This must not be. The faithful sentinels on the watch tower of freedom must not be left to famish on their posts. The city journals will do well enough without any systematic efforts in their favor as a matter of duty; but others are left less fortunate. They have to labor many a weary day and belabor many a man wear out the best years of his life in an arduous and untiring advocacy of Truth and Good Government as a country editor, uniting to it must rigid economy to the most persevering industry, and at last retire from the field penniless and hopeless, when the same exercise of the faculties is almost any other sphere would have secured him competence and a settlement in life. And when at last driven from the arena in prostration of despondency, there is hope for him only upbraiding their years of vicissitude and trials, take credit to themselves that they have paid their beggarly two dollars a year—often grudgingly and at the eleventh hour—and complacently remark that they have done their share to support him, but—poor fellow!—he had no faculty of getting along!

Now this way of 'supporting the Press' will not answer. Many a good paper has been started out by it, where it ought to have been sustained if the Squire and the Doctor, and the Lawyer, and the General, think they do their whole duty by their country paper by taking a copy and paying two dollars for it when they are dunned, they are certainly laboring under a most pernicious mistake. At this rate, farmer A. and blacksmith B, and shoemaker C, will think they do enough by merely borrowing of these dignitaries, or snatching a glance at it in the village tavern. The result will be that a dozen or 20 copies will be taken in a town where there should be two hundred, and demagogues will be enabled to mislead and pervert the minds of honest men into the support of knavery and misrule, when a proper diffusion of intelligence would be sure to prevent it.

There are many very good people who are not aware of the value of a creditable and well conducted journal, to a country, independent of its political influence. That no family can afford to do without a newspaper, simply as a matter of economy, in view of its thousand valuable items of practical information and its importance as an aid to the education of children, is undoubted. But this is not all. The value of land and property generally in a country or village, is enhanced by the neighborhood of a good sized, good looking, and lively journal. A country or village so privileged is constantly in the public eye, abroad and at home. It is a subject of inquiry and conversation. Its productions and facilities are chronicled and go rounds of the newspapers, its advantages strike the eye of the enquirer in any part of the Union. Its citizens may obtain any article they need by simply looking in the newspaper to see where it is sold. This soon attracts from abroad, and creates a quicker demand for all products. In a hundred ways advantages accrue to its merchants, mechanics, professional men and farmers; and we do not hesitate to affirm that if every merchant, manufacturer and professional man were obliged to advertise to the amount of ten to fifty dollars per annum, according to his business so as amply to support the best kind of a paper it would be for the benefit of all and of each.

Not only is society more desirable, but property is actually more valuable, in proportion as intelligence is more thoroughly diffused and the means of constant and certain dissemination at hand, are provided. It is the interest then, of every property holder and business man to aid actively the creation and maintenance of such facilities. In so doing, he is increasing the amount of his trade or the value of his possessions.

But some say, 'I would support a good paper Oars is good for nothing.' The more shame to ourselves. Such is often the case. Papers cannot be sustained for want of money.—They cannot print large papers with only three or four hundred subscribers, and two or three meagre columns of paying advertisements. They cannot have suitable journals and periodicals from which to make up their matter, for with many of the best the difference of price must be paid. They cannot inform themselves fully on the multifarious subjects which demand their attention, and write as they should, because they must work the slaves over their types and press. Editors thus worn by labor, and the feelings of them. If those who complain that their neighborhood paper is inferior or uninteresting, would just set to work and procure three or four hundred advance subscriptions and thirty or forty yearly advertisers, we will guarantee an immediate and satisfactory improvement.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

After the illustrations on the last article, it will seem but a very slight transition when I proceed to specify courage, as an essential part of the decisive character. An intelligent man, adventurous only in thought, may sketch the most excellent scheme, and after duly weighing it, and himself in its stead, may be reduced to say, What a noble spirit that would be which should dare to realize this! A noble spirit! Is it I? And his heart may answer in the negative, while he glances a mortified thought of inquiry round to recollect persons who would venture what he dares not and almost hopes not to find them. Or if by extreme effort he has brought himself to a resolution of braving the difficulty he is compelled to execute this timid suggestion that will keep him back from the trial. A man endowed with the complete character, says, with a sober consciousness as remote from the spirit of bravado as is from timidity, Thus, and thus, is my conviction and my determination: now for the phantoms of fear; let me look them in the face; they will find I am not made of trembling materials: "I dare do all that may become a man." I shall firmly confront every thing that threatens me in the prosecution of my purpose, and I am prepared to meet the consequences out of which it is accomplished. I should despise a being, though it were myself, whose agency could be held enslaved by the gloomy shapes of imagination, by the haunty recollections of a dream, by the whistling or the howling of winds, by the shriek of owls, by the shades of midnight, or by the threats of frowns of man. I should be indignant to feel that in the commencement of an adventure I should think of reaching but the deep pit by the side of that way I must walk, into which I may slide, the mad animal which it is not impossible that I may meet, or the assassin who may lurk in a thicket of yonder wood; and disdain to compromise the interests that rouse me to action, for the privilege of disgraceful security.

As the conduct of a decisive man is always individual, and often singular, he may expect some serious trials of courage. For one thing he may be encountered by the strongest disapprobation of many of his characters, and the censure of the greater part of the society where he is known. In this case, it is not a man of common spirit that can shew himself just as at other times, and meet their anger in the same undisturbed manner as he would meet some ordinary inclemency of the weather: that can without harshness or violence, continue to effect every moment some part of his design, coolly replying to each ungracious look and indignant word, I am sorry to oppose you; I am not unfriendly to you, while thus persisting in what excites your displeasure; it would please me to have your approbation and concurrence, and I think I should have them if you would seriously consider my reasons; but meanwhile, I am superior to opinion, I am not to be intimidated by reproaches, nor won'd your favor and applause be any reward for the sacrifice of my object. As you can do without my approbation, I can certainly do without yours; it is enough that I can approve myself; it is enough that I can appeal to the last authority in the creation. Amuse yourselves as you may, by continuing to censure or to rail; I must continue to act.

The attack of contempt and ridicule, is perhaps a still greater trial of courage. It is felt by all to be an admirable thing, when it can in no degree be ascribed to the hardness of either stupidity or confirmed depravity, to sustain for a considerable time, or in numerous instances, the looks of scorn, or an unrestrained shower of taunts and jeers, with a perfect composure, which shall immediately after, or even at the time, proceed on the business that provokes all this ridicule. This invincibility of temper will often make even the scoffers themselves tired of the sport; they begin to feel that against such a man it is a poor sort of hostility to laugh. There is nothing that people are more ashamed to spend in vain than their scorn. Till, however, a man becomes a veteran, he must reckon on sometimes meeting this trial: and I instantly know—if I hear him anxiously reply, to an important suggestion of a my measure to be adopted, but will they not laugh at me?—I know that he is not the person whom this essay attempts to describe. A man of the right kind would say, they will smile, they will laugh, will they? Much good may it do them. I have something else to do than to trouble myself about their mirth. I do not care if the whole neighborhood were to laugh in a chorus. I should indeed be sorry to see or hear such a number of fools, but pleased enough to find that they did not consider me as one of their stamp. The good to result from my project will not be less, because vain and shallow minds that cannot understand it, are diverted at it and at me. Those who have something else to do than to trouble myself about their mirth. I do not care if the whole neighborhood were to laugh in a chorus. I should indeed be sorry to see or hear such a number of fools, but pleased enough to find that they did not consider me as one of their stamp. The good to result from my project will not be less, because vain and shallow minds that cannot understand it, are diverted at it and at me. Those who have something else to do than to trivial, thoughtless being could comprehend, would applaud them, and of myself, if my courage needed levity and ignorance for their allies, or could shrink at their scorn!

I remember, that on reading the account of the projects for conquering Peru, formed by Almagro, Pizarro, and De Luques, while abhorring the principle and the design of the men, I could not help admiring the hardihood of mind which made them regardless of scorn. These three individuals, before they had obtained any associates, or arms, or soldiers, or a complete knowledge of the power of the kingdom they were to conquer, celebrated a solemn mass in one of the great churches, as a pledge and a commencement of the enterprize, amidst the astonishment and contempt expressed by a multitude of people for what was deemed a monstrous project. They however proceeded through the service, and afterwards to their respective departments of preparation, with an apparently entire insensibility to all the triumphant scorn; and thus gave the first proof of possessing that invincible firmness with which they afterwards prosecuted their design, till they attained a success, the destructive process and many of the results of which humanity will forever deplore.

Milton's Adriel is a noble illustration of the courage which defies scorn.

But in some of the situations where decision of character is to be evinced, a man will be threatened by evils of a darker aspect than disapprobation or contempt. He may apprehend serious sufferings; and very often to dare as far as conscience or a great cause required, has been done to dare to die. In most all plans of great enterprise a man must systematically dismiss, at the entrance, every wish to stipulate for safety with his destiny. He voluntarily treads within the precincts of danger, and though it is possible that he may escape, he ought to be prepared with the fortitude of a self-devoted victim. This is the inevitable condition on which heroes, travellers, or missionaries among savage nations, and reformers on a grand scale, must commence their career. Either they must slay their five of enterprise, or they must hold themselves in readiness to be expelled by it from the world.

Tea.—I have heard much of the beauty of truth; but it is a beauty that no one likes to look upon. 'To find it out is only to find that you have been duped in every possible manner: and to hear it is only to have a friend give way to his temper, and say something disagreeable to you.

A Beautiful Illustration.—What can be a more beautiful illustration of faith; and what can furnish a more striking reproof of fearfulness and unbelief, and anxious care, than the following passage from one of Luther's letters to his desponding friends at Augsburg?

"I looked out of the window and saw two prodigies. I beheld the glittering stars, and all the glorious vault of heaven; I looked around for the pillars by which it was upheld, but I could discover none. Yet it remained firm and secure. The same unseen hand that had formed sustained it still. Yet numbers anxiously search on all sides for its supports; could they feel them with their hands they might be at ease; but as this is impossible, they live in constant disquiet lest the heavens should fall down on their heads. I beheld again, and lo, thick clouds of water, like a mighty ocean, which I saw nothing to contain nothing to hold up, rolled above our heads. Yet they descended not upon us; but after presenting a threatening aspect for a little time, they passed away, and a brilliant rainbow succeeded them. This was our protection. Yet it appeared frail and evanescent; and although it has hitherto proved availing, still numbers think more of the thick and dark mass of waters, than of the slender, fleeting arch of light. They want to have sensible proof of its sufficiency; and, because they cannot obtain that, they live in dread of a second deluge."

Does any one enquire how this extraordinary man attained such a degree of faith? One of his companions says of him, "I cannot sufficiently admire the extraordinary cheerfulness, steadfastness, faith and hope, of this man, in these trying times. He constantly feeds these affections by a very diligent study of the word of God. Then, not a day passes in which he does not employ in prayer, at least three of his very best hours.—Once I happened to hear him at prayer. What spirit, what faith, is there in his expressions. He petitions God with as much reverence as if he were in the divine presence; and yet, with as firm a hope and confidence as he would address a father or a friend." N.

What Good does it do.—A lady who was not in the habit of wearing jewelry, having been pressed by a friend to accept a gold ring, her little daughter, seeing it on her finger, inquired, "What good does it do, mother?" This simple inquiry suggests many important reflections. Jesus went about doing good. He left us an example that we should follow in his steps. Are we then at liberty to do any thing without making this inquiry? And, if every christian would make it, before he purchases any thing for himself or his family, how much more would he be able to give for benevolent purposes! And how long would every benevolent enterprise languish for support! Again, how many temptations would be avoided, and how much valuable time, or energy might be saved, which are now expended in employments which do no good.—Ib. N.

A fasting Story of Maternal Love.—In the village of Carregji, whether it was that due precaution had not been taken, or that the disease was of a particularly malignant nature, one after another, first the young and then the old of a whole family, dropped off. A woman who lived on the opposite side of the way, the wife of a laborer, and mother of two little boys, felt herself attacked by fever in the night; in the morning it greatly increased, and in the evening the fatal symptoms appeared. This was during the absence of her husband, who went to work at a distance, and only returned on Saturday nights: bringing home the scanty means of subsistence for the family for the week. Terrified by the example of the neighboring family, moved by the tenderest love for her children, and determined not to communicate the disease to them, she formed the heroic resolution of leaving her home, and going elsewhere to die. Locking them into a room, and sacrificing to their safety even the last and sole comfort of a parting embrace, off she ran down stairs, carrying with her the sheets and coverlets, that she might leave no means of contagion behind her. She shut the door with a sigh, and went away: but the biggest, bearing the door shut went to the window, and seeing her run in that manner, cried out, 'Good bye, mother,' in a voice so tender that she involuntarily stopped. 'Good bye, mother,' repeated the youngest, holding his little head out of the window; and poor was the poor afflicted mother compelled for a time to endure the dreadful conflict between the yearnings which called her back, and the pity and resolution which urged her on. At length the latter conquered, and amid a flood of tears and the farewells of her children, who knew not the fatal cause and source of these tears, she reached the house of those who were to bury her. She recommended her husband and children to them, and in two days she was no more!

Surely nothing can equal the heart of a mother! How precious the expression of pure womanhood on hearing a parish priest relate the story of Abraham's offering his son Isaac as a sacrifice. 'An! God would certainly never have required such a sacrifice of a mother!'

How to treat a blackguard.—Regard him with pity and contempt, and when he finds that he is base but seeks him to a lower depth in the estimation of all good citizens, he will cease to be. Treat him with silent contempt. By all means refrain from any verey with him, or from taking an example from him.—Intem.

The Missing One.

"We miss him when the board is spread,
We miss him when the page is read;
In all our sports, where yet is one,
Whose smile is missed, where late it shone."

They've met again, within the classic dome,
That youthful band! from school set free,
Each, with a lightsome heart, to seek his home,
And eager for his holidays of glee.
They've met, but yet not all—a vacant place
(Reserved for one, they looked for, but in vain,)
Remains to tell of a familiar face,
Which never more, will join their festive train.

Yet little dreamed he, when the last adieu
Was said to him, the guardian of his mind—
To his loved mates, with whom a chosen few
His soul a sweet companionship did find,
That 'twas the last—that he who breathed it, turned
In all the freshness of unblighted youth,
To meet an early grave, where first he learned
To sing the sacred page of Heavenly Truth!

But thus it was—the heart whose quickened beat,
Bespoke the swelling hopes of joyous hours—
In calmness of pleasure, when his eye should greet
The home where childhood wove its fairest flowers.
Hath ceased to beat—the fresh, warm tide of life,
Sudden was checked, while in its sanguine flow;
The green, icy grasp, the dreaded mortal strife,
With him are passed! and now he slumbers low.

O'er the blue waters, tidings that are borne,
To that unconscious pair, who left their son
In the fair promises of youth's bright morn,
Hopes which they yet, are fondly doating on.
May Heaven support you, now bereaved pair!
For not 'mid foreign circles, do ye heed
The bitter tale, which swift is hasting there,
And grace to bear it, ah! much grace you'll need.

Thus, are the dreams of happiness on earth,
But dreams at best, from which the soul must wake,
To plant its hopes where sorrow hath no birth—
Where death, affections chain can never break.
To him lamented, neither youth nor health
Were safe-guards, when the fatal arrow came;
But free from death's assaults, is that true wealth,
Which he hath left behind,—a spotless name.

Steamboats beaten in speed.—M. Jobard, of Brussels, (says the Nouvelliste) has discovered a method, according to which it is asserted that the Straits of Calais may be crossed in eleven minutes, by means of a pyrotechnical composition, of which the chlorate of potash is the basis, but in a less proportion than in Congreve rockets. The whole apparatus consists in a boat, with the floating properties of the life boat, long and narrow, crossed at its greatest diameter by one or more iron tubes charged with the pyrotechnical composition. By applying fire to these tubes, the openings to which should pass beyond the stern of the boat, the reaction is stated to be such that the boat will glide over the water with a swiftness never attained on any railway. The construction being upon the principle of the life boat, the person embarking in it will run no risk than that of getting a few momentary duckings, but will always rise again to the surface. The building of the boat will not cost more than 1,000 francs, and each voyage will require 100 francs worth of gunpowder.

The Great eclipse.—The following fine description of the great eclipse of 1806, is from the pen of Mr. E. S. Thomas, the vene able editor of the Cincinnati Eve. Post:

It was our happiness to be at Providence, R. Island, when the total eclipse of June 1806, took place—the day was perfectly bright—the phenomenon commenced between eleven and twelve o'clock, and after the sun became totally obscured, it remained so for more than half an hour. Its operation upon animated nature was truly and awfully sublime. The birds flew about in every direction, in evident distress and terror, and domestic fowls ran about in all directions cackling as in a fright. Horses galloped round their pastures neighing; while the horned cattle, which seemed more affrighted than the rest, tore up the earth with their horns and feet in madness—all this uproar was followed by the silence of midnight, when the eclipse was complete—the birds retired to their resting places—the fowls to their roosts—the horses to their stalls, and the cattle to their mangers, while the stars shone forth in their beauty and all was still. When the sun began to appear a large number of musicians, students of Brown University, assembled upon the terrace of the College, and struck up Miltons hymn to Light.—The effect was altogether sublime and beautiful. Nothing that ever met our eye or ear, before or since, was equal to it.

The Lion Tamer.—Van Amburg is himself one of the greatest lions at present in London. The account he gives of his intercourse with the wild animals is very interesting. Van Amburg has a novel and practical theory to account for his power over them. From the first moment of his intercourse with them, he talked to them as he would to a human being. "They believe" says he, "that I have power to tear every one of them in pieces if they do not act as I say. I tell them so and have frequently enforced it with a heavy crowbar." The personal strength, the peculiar cast of his eye, the rapidity of his movements, the tone of his voice, all tend to present to those animals an idea of superior power, which in sudden bursts of his passion makes them crouch in the corner of the cage. Van Amburgh's eyes are peculiar: one of them has a remarkable cast, which rather heightens the effect of his expressive face, as is said of the "terrible eye of Caleph Vatheck." On one occasion in New York the lion sprang upon him, and seizing his head coolly took his crowbar and gave him a tremendous blow over the head. "He then said to himself good English, as the words formed themselves, "You big scoundrel, if you snore me any more of your pranks I'll knock your brains out," accompanying it with loud menaces and strong gesticulation. After this the tiger behaved like a gentleman for a couple of months. In coming over to this country Van Amburgh was separated from those animals for several weeks. They arrived in London he in Liverpool. As soon as he received London he sent to see them. On his appearance outside the cage, one of the strangest scenes was presented that ever was beheld. The lions, tigers and all recognized him at once, when he first entered among the group, they crouchen, they crawled, they lashed their tails with every demonstration of delight at beholding him again. He scratched the neck of the big lion, and his majesty growled forth his pleasure in tones like the sound of distant thunder. In ancient and modern history we have read of attempts made to tame single animals; but till the present era we have never seen such a mighty exhibition of human over animal power as Mr. Van Amburgh presents. The lion and the lamb literally lie down together. Yet the feats of familiarity, performed nightly at Astley's are nothing, it is said, to those which he performed at New York.

Canada News.—Montreal papers of Thursday announce the arrest of John McDonnell, a respectable lawyer of that city, of good breeding, for being concerned in the Rebellion. A tri-colored flag, and some letters addressed to him as major general of the patriot army, was found in his possession. He was taken at three rivers, and when he landed, handcuffed to another traitor, and under a guard of soldiers, the crowd groaned, shouted and yelled, and while on his way to the old jail, along the beach so far as the new market the crowd swelled with stones and mud, was spat upon on the face, and insulted in every possible way. It was with extraordinary difficulty that the more highly excited portion of the crowd was restrained from lynching him. Some 30 or 40 other insurgents have been secured. It appears by their private papers that the property of the city was to be wrested from the owners when the rebels should get possession of it. The Jews were doomed to die.

Detachments of the regular troops were stationed about the country. The Burlington (Vt.) sentinel of the 7th says that the insurgents have risen at Sorel, Berthier, Bellisle, Chambly, Beauharnois, Chateauguay and several other places. That the village of St. Pierre had been burned by the British troops. That the insurgents have possession of the whole county of Acadie.

Pyramid of Cheops.—This monument of pride, science, or superstition—who knows which?—was building while Abraham was in Egypt; Joseph and his brethren must have seen the sun set behind it every day they sojourned in Egypt; it must have been the last object Moses and the departing Israelites lost sight of as they quitted the land of bondage; Pythagoras, Herodotus, Alexander, and Caliphs—it has been the goal of nations! Lost nations have engirdled it in foot and looked up, as their common ancestors did before them, in awe and hurried on; and now two strangers from the 'ultima thule' of the ancients, Britain, severed from the whole world by a watery line which they considered it impious to transgress, stand here on the summit, and, looking round, see a desert where once stood the 'cloud capt towers, the gorgeous palaces' The temples and tombs of Memphis arose in their calm beauty, and wisdom dwelt among the groves of palm and acacia—all starry now, and deserted, except by the wandering arab and his camel.—Lord Lindsay's Letters.

A Falling off.—The editor of the Salisbury Watchman tells the following excellent story. We suppose "Jake," is one of those who entertain an antipathy to the "tarnal fatheier:"

"Shortly previous to the last Presidential election, the editor of this paper went to the Hatter's shop, seven miles off, and made a speech in favor of the Whig candidate, Judge White. As soon as he was done, an old friend of his took him one side, and the following dialogue took place; 'Jones,' says our friend, 'we don't want to know any thing about these men you have been talking about, and we don't know how about your form. Spose you come out yours if every man of us will go for you down this way.' 'Why, Jake, I am too poor a man to bear the expenses of electioneering on such a grand scale; my pocket would give out before I had treated one half of the nation.' 'Ah, that indeed!' said our friend, and he seemed puzzled—he kept repeating, 'that indeed,' 'that indeed,' At length, starting from his reverie, he says, 'Well Jones since you can't offer for President spose you run for Sheriff.

A new way to quench thirst.—In a certain village lived an honest farmer, who having a number of men hoeing in a field, went to see how his work went on. Finding one of them sitting still, he reproved him for his idleness. The man answered "I thirst for the spirit." "Grog, you mean, I suppose," said the farmer, "but if the Bible teaches you to thirst after the spirit, it says also, 'hoe, every one that thirsteth."

In Mr. Green's account of his second experimental trip in his Nassau balloon, with Mr Rush, he states, that the extreme height attained was 27,146 feet, which is higher than any known mountain in the world. The thermometer fell to 27 degrees below the freezing point, and the barometer to 11 inches.

The highest inhabited Places in the known world are in Peru. The cottages, at the source of the Accumarca, are at an elevation of 15,750 feet above the level of the sea. The village of Tacora is 14,275 feet high. Potosi, once containing a population of 150,000, is 13,000 feet above the level of the sea.

THE UNION

PLAINFIELD.

Saturday, November 17, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man.—THOMAS JEFFERSON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN,

That application will be made to the present session of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey for an act making a new County, to comprise the township of Warren in Somerset county, and the lower skirt of Bernard township in said county; and of the townships of Westfield, Rahway, and New Providence, in Essex county; and the north western skirt of the townships of Piscataway and Woodbridge, in Middlesex county: and Long Hill, in Morris county.

Plainfield, Nov. 5th, 1838. 9t 6w

New County.

Agreeably to the proceedings of the meeting at Scotch Plains, published in our last paper, hand-bills were printed inviting the inhabitants of the region described in the above notice, to meet on Monday afternoon of last week, the 12th inst. at Mr. Jacob Thorn's tavern, in Plainfield. The meeting was large and respectable, and the attendance was pretty general from the several townships proposed to be included in its boundaries. As to the propriety of endeavoring to obtain the act referred to, there was hardly a dissenting voice, among the many assembled. The proceedings follow:

At a meeting held this 12th of November, 1838 to take into consideration the propriety of applying to the present Legislature to erect a New County according to the limits proposed in the handbill calling the meeting; Dr. Elias Runyon was chosen Chairman, and John Wilson chosen Secretary.

1st—It was Resolved—That it is expedient to proceed to take the necessary measures to obtain the New County as above referred to—to be called the county of Washington.

2d.—Resolved—That a committee of seven persons be appointed to make a survey and map of the proposed New County, with an estimate of the number of inhabitants it will contain, and that a Committee of five be appointed to nominate the above committee of seven, and also to present an estimate of the sum necessary to be raised to meet all expenses,—the committee of five to be John W. Craig, Zachariah Webster, Martin Runyon, Joseph Ludlow, and Abm. Runyon.

The committe of five reported as the committee of seven, Daniel Shotwell, Ezra Wilcox, Noah Drake, David Dunn, Jacob Flatt, E. Y. Rogers, and Z. Webster,—and two hundred dollars as the sum necessary to be raised; which report was approved by the meeting, and adopted.

3d.—Resolved—That Z. Webster, Elisha Runyon, and Alfred Berry be a committee to circulate a subscription to raise the necessary funds.

4th.—Resolved,—That when the meeting adjourns, it shall be to meet again at the call of the chairman—and that these proceedings be published in the Plainfield Union.

ELIAS RUNYON, Chairman.
JOHN WILSON, Secretary.

☞ We perceive with pleasure that Governor Pennington has recommended Thursday, the 29th inst. to be observed as a day public Thanksgiving and prayer, by the people of this state. The same day is designated for that purpose by the governors of New York, Michigan, and most if not all of the New England States.

☞ The Rahway Herald, in speaking of the application of the people in this region for a new county, says:

"We always like to be first in the market, if we don't buy any thing—therefore would merely suggest, that the new county, should the Legislature pass favorably upon it, be called "Clark county" in honor of Abraham Clark, one of the signers of the declaration of Independence, whose remains now repose "unhonored and unsung," in a "corner" of Essex county.

The editor of the Herald will perceive by the proceedings of the meeting that "Washington" is the name agreed on, in honor of the Father of his country, who was in the proposed county, in the Revolution. It is not too late, however, to give it another name, if it should be thought advisable. The only objection we have to the name "Washington," is that there are already so many counties, cities and towns of that name in the United States, that, ere long, we shall hardly be able to distinguish one place from another.

We learn by the Rahway Herald of Wednesday last, that incendiaries have been busily at work at that place. On Saturday the 10th inst. a barn belonging to Jonathan Thompson, was burnt; the contents mostly saved. The same day, a fire was discovered in a stable in the rear of the Herald office, occupied by Luther Lathrop was a man of genuine piety, but much opposed to the noisy zeal that sometimes is known of men. A young fellow, who was much given to ludicrous and cant, one day said to him, "Do you suppose you have any real religion?" "None to speak of" was the excellent reply.

Steamboat explosion.—The steamboat Lexington, Capt. Shaw, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 13th inst. on Lake Michigan, when about 18 miles from Michigan City, and 60 miles from Chicago. Of 150 persons on board, 120 perished. The Lexington was a new boat, and had made but one trip before. She was owned by Messrs. Newberry & Co. of Detroit, and was valued at $40,000. She was insured for $20,000 in the Mutual Safety Insurance Company of New York. The fire originated in the cabin, and spread with such rapidity that the boat was enveloped in flames before it had done much injury, for it might have laid a good portion of the village in ruins. The same evening a stack, consisting of about 1,100 bundles of oats, and 4 tons of hay, was nearly all destroyed. It belonged to Enoch M. Shotwell, and with others was situated near his house and buildings, which were saved with difficulty. The Herald says that several other stacks have been made to set buildings on fire.

New-York Election.

GREAT WHIG TRIUMPH.

Contrary to all expectation, Mr. Seward, the whig candidate, is elected governor of New York by the large majority of 11,000. The legislature will be divided as follows:

	Whig.	Van Buren.
Senate,	14	18
House,	81	47
Total,	95	65

Whig majority on joint ballot, 30.

The members of Congress ascertained to be elected are as follows,—the whigs being in italic.

1st district,—Thomas B. Jackson,
2d.—James de la Montanye,
3d.—Ogden Hoffman,
Edward Curtiss,
Moses H. Grinnell, Whig gain,
James Monroe, Whig gain.
4th.—Governeur Kemble.
5th.—Charles Johnson, Whig gain.
6th.—Nathaniel Jones.
7th.—Rufus Paten, Whig. gain.
8th.—Aaron Vanderpool,
John Ely.
9th.—Hiram P. Hunt, Whig gain,
10th.—Daniel D. Barnard, Whig gain.
11th.—Anson Brown, Whig gain.
12th.—David Russel,
13th.—Administration.
14th.—Administration.
15th.—Peter J. Waggoner, Whig gain.
16th.—Andrew W. Doig,
17th.—John G. Floyd,
David P. Brewster,
18th.—Thomas G. Chettenden, Whig gain,
19th.—John H. Prentiss,
20th.—Judson Allen.
21st.—John C. Clark, Whig gain.
22nd.—S. B. Leonard,
Amasa Dana,
23d.—Edward Rogers,
Nehemiah H. Earl.
24th.—Christopher Morgan, Whig gain,
25th.—Administration.
26th.—Francis P. Granger,
27th.—Administration.
28th.—Thomas Kempshall,
29th.—Seth M. Gates,
30th.—Luther Peck,
31st.—Richard P Marvin,
32d.—Millard Fillmore,

The last congressional delegation stood 10 W to 30 Adm. The present, 21 W. to 19 Adm. which makes a whig gain of 11 members, which will probably give to the whig party an ascendency in the next U. S. House of Representatives.

☞ The administration members of our state Legislature have published an address to the people of the state complaining of the decision of the Governor and majority of Privy council, in respect to the congressional candidates, and have called a State Convention, to be held in the state house at Trenton, on the 8th day of January next, at 10 o'clock, A. M. to take the matter into consideration. They recommend that county and township meetings be held to appoint delegates thereto.

A very large meeting was held at New Brunswick, on Saturday, the 10th inst. at which a report of considerable length, accompanied with affidavits, was read, exhibiting the facts in connexion with the returns from South Amboy,—which was accepted, and 1000 copies ordered to be printed. Another meeting was to be held on the 15th inst. to appoint delegates to a county convention to be held at New Brunswick, on the 1st day of December next, to appoint delegates to the State convention referred to above.

The Anti-Masonic Convention held in Philadelphia last week, have unanimously nominated William Henry Harrison, for President of the United States, and Daniel Webster, for Vice President.

New Jersey Legislature.

Nothing of consequence, except the trial of the Cumberland contested election before the committees, occurred before Wednesday, the 14th Both houses agreed to the petition of Mercer county, to use the old state prison as a county jail; also granted permission to that county to borrow $20,000 for county purposes.

Resolutions relating to the Militia laws, and alterations of the same; also, relating to the arrest and ordnance belonging to the state, were read and agreed to.

Thursday, Nov. 15th

The committees on the Cumberland election case both reported to the two houses respectively. The majority (Whigs) reported in favor of the whig candidates, and the minority, (administration men) made a report in favor of the administra-in favor of the whigs, the sitting members.

Both houses were this week engaging for the appointment of Senator, Judge, &c.

Ahasal L. Sanford was re-appointed U. S. Senator, for six years from the 4th of March next. Mr. S. received 36 votes, and Mahlon Dickerson 23.

Isaac Stoutard, Treasurer.

James S., Nevius, of New Brunswick, Judge of the Supreme Court.

Joseph A. Yard, keeper of the state prison.

Philemon Dickerson, Justice in Essex county.

Sixty-one other appointments were made.

Friday, Nov. 16th.

A joint resolution was passed in the house allowing the V. B. members from Cumberland, the usual $3 per day, while attending claiming their seats.

Late and Important from Canada.—By the Newark Daily of Saturday evening we learn that a steamboat and two schooners with about 500 men well armed invaded Canada on the 12th inst. near Prescott. Arms and ammunition appear to be abundant. The leader of the patriots is a young Pole, aged 35 who has seen some service at Warsaw. The results are not yet known

FOREIGN.

The Great Western arrived in New York on Thursday last bringing news to the 27th of October. She left Bristol on that day, and made her passage in 18 days, having experienced heavy gales and seas and much adverse weather. She brings 114 passengers, and they are well satisfied of the sea-worthiness of the vessel, and the practicability of using steam in ocean navigation in any weather.

The Great Western left New York in her last passage home, Oct. 4th, and arrived at Bristol, after the remarkable short run of 12 1-2 days.

Cotton had advanced 1-4d per lb. Large sales had taken place. Money was abundant.

The New York packet St. James had sailed from Liverpool with a cargo of potatoes.

A fire has occurred at Liverpool, total loss $300,000, insured.

The steam packet Liverpool left Liverpool, Oct. 20, and is not yet arrived. She had 60 passengers, among them, John Van Buren, son of the President. It is supposed that she was short of fuel, and steered for Nova Scotia.

Massachusetts.—Of the 12 members of Congress from Massachusetts, 10 are whigs as before, 1 Van Buren man, and in one district, no choice.

In the state Legislature from the 223 towns heard from the administration has gained 84 members.

Delaware.—The electors of Delaware have chosen Mr. Robinson, a Van Buren man, as the only member of Congress. An administration gain. Both parties claim a majority in the state legislature.

Illinois.—John P. Stuart has at last received his certificate of election to Congress. His majority is said to be 5.

The value of produce on the New York and Erie canals is about $70,000,000 per annum, or nearly to the amount that passes down the Mississippi.

Potatoes are selling a six shillings the bushel at Wilmington, Del. by wholesale.

The wine and cigars furnished to the Legislature of Michigan, were charged to the state under the head of "Stationary."

In Persia, each day of the month has its distinct name as the days of our week.

Corn was selling at from 20 to 25 cents per bushel at Terre Haute, Indianna, the 4th inst.

Efforts are making to get a geological survey of this state. A good move.

The Mormon war had broken out again on the 1st. They had burnt Davies Court House, Post Office, and a store. The Governor of Missouri had ordered out 4,000 militia, and the Mormons were receiving accessions by emigrants from Canada.

Problem for Southern Politicians.—Land is cheaper at the South than at the North—Because there is in the former more of it absolutely —as well as relatively to the population inhabiting it. Take a fact to show the difference between a slave state and a free state. A valuation of the lands in the United States was made in 1790 and another in 1814. In this period of 15 years, Virginia, with forty millions of acres, increased the value of her lands only 94 millions of dollars—while Pennsylvania, with but 28 millions of dollars. This disparity, in a form more or less astonishing, is to be found in making a comparison of any part of the free with the slave states.—N. Y. Sun.

The Columbus, Ohio, Sentleman says.—"We learn that W. H. Creighton, the Whig member elect to the House of Representatives from the counties of Fayette and Madison, died at his residence in Washington, a few days since. His death was caused by bleeding of the lungs a complaint he had long been subject. He was highly esteemed by his neighbors."

From Texas.—The latest intelligence from Texas is that the Indians and Mexicans threaten another hostile movement against the white settlements. The Opelousas (La.) Gazettee, of the 27th ult. says we learn from a gentleman Just arrived from Jaspar county, Texas, that the Indians had killed several Texan soldiers and taken possession of Fort Houston, situated in the vicinity of the Trinity river.

A Live Mermaid.—A prodigious excitement prevails in Ireland, especially in the North, in consequence of an actual living Mermaid.—which was recently caught in a salmon net at Honnerav Point, in the county of Donegal. There can be no mistake in this fact, as five or six papers corroborate it, in the important points. The country people were flocking in hundreds about the place, to see and believe.

The Fermanah Journal says—"This is certainly a sea woman, and has such an expression of intelligence in its countenance, that we are absolutely inclined to believe that it is a creature of reason, rather than of instinct. It weighs about 70 pounds, and is altogether human in its outward organization from the head to the navel, when the fins begin to develope itself, and the remainder is formed very like the remainder of a large dolphin. The skin of the face and the breast is a whitish brown, the eyes are black, and the nose purely aquiline; an dits eye brows, lips and chin, are models for a sculptura. The hair is long and thick, and the creature's principal amusemen seems to be to stroke it downward with her webbed, but otherwise perfect fingers."

A New Article of Food.—The Potomac Advocate states that the proprietors of the Georgetown broom factory have determined upon having ground and bolted, the large quantity of broom corn seed daily accumulating in their factory. They think it will make good food for animals.

Eight miles of the New Haven and Hartford Railroad, commencing at New Haven, was opened on Wednesday. In a few days the rails will be laid down to Meriden, half way to Hartford.

Their assortment consists of Stanley's Rotary, of all sizes, Pooley's, Church & Seeley's, James', and all sizes of the same plate.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low; they consist chiefly of Pooley's, Clussmann's, Lyon's, James', Oxley's, Wilmore, Cable and Nine Plates; they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and we they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat: we shall only, that they are now made handsomer and better than ever; and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved te be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, fever & ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, of very great value, having I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into go neral use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit-o the public, I send you this few lines: I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and peoperly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended—especially for acsc-ides worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them: they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or diapepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution which requires one more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conception of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and p eaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, executed from the most original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this purpose—reviews upon the various productions of the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the latest dramas and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading, tending to inform the mind, such as briefs of legals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, with the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Mr. Morris and will, therefore, be therefore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mu-sick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable acquisitions for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and it it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country-women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate a pleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive delicacy, it is they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid steel plate quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mutual effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its c ef aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire. This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 19, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Correspondence of the Boston Atlas.

Girard College.

Philadelphia, Oct. 22, 1838.

A few days ago, invited by the calmness of the air and the brilliant sunshine, I strolled several miles beyond the limits of the city. I took the Ridge road, which leads to the Girard College and the Laurel Hill Cemetery. The former is three miles from the Merchant's Exchange, in Dock street. It is situated in Penn township, on a tract of land containing forty-five acres, purchased by Mr. Girard a short time before his death for the purposes of the college.

Two large marble structures designed for the reception of pupils and the use of the professors, are already completed, or so nearly so that they could be made ready for occupancy in two or 3 weeks. The main central building, the corner stone of which was laid 5 years ago, last 4th of July, is now nearly ready for the reception of its roof. Several of the columns are up, and have received their capitals, and two are finished, having been fluted from the base to the capitals. This building is 160 feet from by 217 feet on the flank including the portieoes. It is to be surrounded by a colonnade consisting of 34 columns of white marble, of the Corinthian order, 6 feet in diameter at the base, and 54 feet 6 inches high, including the capitals and bases. The ascent to the portieoes by 12 white marble steps, surrounding the entire building, and the pavement between the walls and the columns a 15 feet wide. Each story is separated into four apartments, 50 feet square in clear. The vestibules are each 23 ft. by 48 and are to have winding marble stairs. The whole height of the structure is 97 feet.—There are in arch central situation of the Girard College; but no statistics and no description can convey an adequate idea of the magnificence and noble effect of the entire edifice. The richness and purity of the material, the simplicity and harmony of the proportions, the majestic colonnade, rivalling that of the temple of Jupiter on the banks of the Illissus, and the massive solidity of the workmanship, apparently bidding defiance to every thing but an actual convulsion of nature —fill the mind with a sentiment approaching to awe. When it shall have received the finishing touch, and, the last scoffolding being removed, shall be revealed in full proportion to our gaze, it will be an object equally gratifying to the eye of taste and the heart of philanthropy. And what bosom will not bound, and what eyes fail to flow, at these magnificence, breathe anew the prayer so beautifully conceived and so eloquently *expressed by the President of the Board of trus*tees, (N. Biddle, Esq.) on the occasion of laying the corner stone: "Long may the structure stand in its majestic simplicity, the pride and admiration of our latest posterity; long may it continue to yield its annual harvests of educated and moral citizens, guardians and defenders of our country. Long may each successive age enjoy its still increased benefits, when time shall have filled its halls with the memory of the mighty dead who have been reared within them, and shed over its outward beauty the mellowing hues of a thousand years of renown."

Mr. Girard himself has marked out a liberal course of study; he has allowed ample time—twelve years—for the mastery of all the sciences embraced in it; and he has expressly enjoined upon all the teachers in the College to inculcate upon the pupils the "purest principles of morality." These things, together with the high character of the gentlemen composing the board of trustees, and of the President of the College, ought surely to be held a sufficient guaranty that the splendid bequest of Mr. Girard will be for the blessing and not the cursing of our country. And if this be so, what imagination shall affix limits to the amount of benefits destined to spring through a long succession of ages, from this source, to the destitute orphans of our country, and through them to the whole nation? Consider the vastness of the endowments. "After the building shall have been completed," says Mr. Biddle, "there will remain the annual income from $2,000,000, now yielding $102,000, and if these funds should be inadequate for all the purposes applying for admission, the income of nearly all the remainder of the estate is appropriated to the erection of as many new buildings as his square in the city would have continued. So that, in general, it may be stated, with reasonable confidence, that when all the buildings are ready for the reception of the pupils, there will be available for the maintainance of the institution, an income of not less than $100,000, which may be increased to at least $220,000."

No one who visits the college should fail of ascending to the top. This is 125 feet above the level of the ground, and affords the most extensive, variegated and beautiful prospect to be enjoyed any where in the neighborhood of Philadelphia; embracing the city with its districts, the windings of the Delaware and Schuylkill, and a vast extent of country sprinkled with numerous villages and country seats, and diversified by hill and dale, wood and, lawn, and cultivated fields.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

The last decisive energy of a rational conqueror, which confides in the supreme Power, is very infinite. It makes a man who intrepidly dares every thing that can oppose or attack him within the whole sphere of morality; who would retain his purpose unshaken amidst the ruins of the world who will still press toward his object while death is impending over him.

It was the true elevation of this character that Luther, when cited to appear at the Diet of Worms, under a questionable assurance of safety from high authority, said to his friends, who conjured him not to go, and justly brought the example of John Huss, who in a similar situation, and with the same pledge of protection, had, notwithstanding, been burnt alive, "I am called in the name of God to go, and I would go, though I were certain to meet as many devils in Worms, as there are tiles on the houses."

A reader of the Bible will not forget Daniel braving in calm devotion the decree which virtually consigned him to the den of Lions; or Shadrach, Meschach and Abednego, saying to the tyrant, "We are not careful to answer thee in this matter," when the furnace was in sight

The combination of these several essential principles, constitutes that state of mind, which is the supreme requisite to decision of character, and perhaps its most striking distinction, that *a full agreement of the mind with itself, the co-op*eration of all its powers and all its dispositions.

What an unfortunate task it would be for a charioteer, who had harnessed a set of horses, however strong, if he could not make them draw together; if, while one would go forward, another was restive, another struggled backward, and another started aside. If even one of the four were unmanageably perverse, with the long reins, and the lash in his hand, how much his crutch might soon leave Phaeton behind. So in a human being, unless the chief forces act consentaneously, there can be no inflexible vigor, either of will or of execution. One dissentient principle in the mind, not only deducts so much from the strength and mass of its agency, but it confounds and embarrasses all the rest. If the judgment holds in a low estimation that which yet the passions incline a man to pursue, his pursuit will be irregular and inconstant, though it may have occasional fits of animation, when those passions happen to be also gly stimulated. If *there is an opposition between judgment and ha*bit, though the man will probably continue to act mainly under the direction of habit in spite of his opinions, yet sometimes the intrusion of those opinions will have for the moment an effect like that of Prospero's wand on the Duke of Ferdinand; and to be alternately impelled by habit, and repelled by opinion, will be a state of vexatious debility. If two principal passions are opposite to each other, they will utterly distract the strongest mind. The one may be somewhat stronger than the other, and therefore just prevail barely enough to give a feeble impulse to the conduct of the man; but no powerful impulse can be given, till the disparity of these two rivals become greater, in consequence of the gradual weight of habit, or the reinforcement supplied by some impressions, being added to the accumulating power of the other.

The disparity must be no less than an absolute predominance of the one and subjection of the other, before the prevailing passion will have at liberty, if I may so express it a) any large measure of its force to throw activity into the system of conduct. If, for instance, a man feels at once the love of fame which is to be gained only by arduous exertion, and an equal degree of the love of pleasure which precludes those exertions; if he is industrious for the sake of splendour, and yet anxious to save money; if he has the curiosity of adventure, and yet that solicitude for his safety which forbids him to climb a precipice, descend into a cavern, or explore a dangerous wild; if he has the stern will of a tyrant, and yet the relentings of a man: if he has the ambition which would subdue his fellow mortals, counteracted by the humanity which would not hurt them; we can easily anticipate the irresolute and tottering character of his actions. Especially if conscience, that great troubler of the human breast, loudly declares against a man's wishes or projects, it will be a fatal energy to decision, till it either reclaim the delinquent passions, or be debauched or murdered by them.

Desert of California.—This immense plain, the existence of which was, until very recently, wholly unknown, is situated in the central part of Upper or New California in Mexico. It is limited on the North by a mass of Rocks, which separate it from the head waters of the Lewis river; on the west by an irregular chain of mountains extending in a parallel ridge along the shore of the Pacific Ocean; on the East side by the western branches of the Colerado, and on the south by the valley of the Colerad . Its area is *equal to that of Virginia, and consists of an el*evated plateau of table land, flanked on all sides by descents, more or less steep according to their geological structure. In all its essential features the remarkable waste resembles the great Sahara of Africa. It presents little else than an arid surface, broken at intervals by a few detached mountains of limited extent; but ranges in some instances above the region of perpetual snow. From these mountains, small streams flow during the rainy season. On reaching the plains these torrents usually disappear in the sand, leaving no other trace of their existence than the fragments of rocks and other debris, which are borne down by the current and deposited on the sides of the hills. No regular can present a more dreary and desolate appearance. A solitary antelope or bleak tailed deer, wild in the extreme, and a few straggling Indians among the most wretched objects in creation, may sometimes be seen traversing the plains. The country beyond the mountains which bounds the desert on the west is inhabited by numerous tribe of the short haired Indians. They occupy the valley of the Buenaventura, and hunt the elk, antelope, black tailed deer, grizley bear, &c. Immediately adjoining the desert, on the north east is situated one of the most extensive lakes in this part of the continent. In common with all other isolated lakes of great extent, its waters are strongly impregnated with rock salt, which abounds in the mountains on the East.—Tanner's Notes.

Fair Play.—Mr. Curran, who was a very small man, having a dispute with a brother counsel, who was a very stout man, in which words ran high on both sides, called him out, the other however objected. "For," said he, "you are so little that I might fire at you a dozen times with out hitting; whereas the chance is, that you would shoot me at the first fire." "Upon my conscience that is true!" said Curran. "But to convince you that I don't wish to take any advantage, you may chalk my size upon your body, and all his out of the ring shall go for nothing."

March of Intellect.—The following profound conversation took place verbatim between a master and his pupil in one of our country schools:

Master. How long ago was America discovered?

Boy. About fifty years ago, sir.

Ha! Well, when did the revolutionary war take place?

Boy. About three hundred years ago.

What did Columbus carry back with him to Spain?

The story of his voyages and discoveries by Washington Irving.

More monstrous lies.—One of the English papers under the head of "new American patent," announces the discovery of a "patent hydrophobia water proof hat, made of the skin of a mad dog, warranted not to take water." A notorious joker having expressed his surprise at this announcement, a bystander remarked, that a much more effectual water-proof article could be made out of his mouth, for it had not been known to take water these ten years.

Droll if true.—A man was found asleep in the CHANNEL of the Ohio, near Cincinnati. When seen, he was lying on his back, and his nose had burnt away all the water within boiling distance.

Fast Driving.—"Coachman," said an outside passenger to one who was driving at a furious rate over one of the most mountainous roads in the north of England, "have you no consideration for our lives and limbs?"—"What are your lives and limbs to me," was the reply: "I am behind my time!"

Economy.—A stove has been invented in this city, called the "poor man's stove," which the patentee offers to furnish, together with pipe and coal enough to burn through the winter for fifteen dollars! Can any of the Boston stove men come up to this?

Nautical Travestie.—The disposition of sailors to travestie nams of vessels, was amusingly exhibited to us this morning. We met two seamen in the street, one said "Well, Bill, so you are going out in the Fast Sailer" (Pharsalia.) "No," replied the other, "I've shipped in the Palm-liter," (Palmyra.)

Death of Mrs. Louisa H. Hamblin.—This lady formerly Miss. Medina, but known lately as the wife of Thomas S. Hamblin of N. Y., died suddenly in that city early on Monday morning last. She is said to have been for some time past in ailing state, from stendency of blood to the head, to which circumstances her death is ascribed. She was Hamblin's 3d wife.

A Sneezer.—Said a lady to a little girl from Boston the other day, "how do you like riding in the cars?" "Why the cars are well enough, only the steam engine keeps all the time a coughing and sneezing so," The little bright eyed Miss spoke the truth. Railroad steamers are certainly the greatest coughers, sneezers, and whistlers in the known world, and moreover bid fair to cough down all opposition.—Salem Obs.

Shingle Machine.—We were present a few minutes whilst a machine, just erected near the lower Gla s works was put into operation, for the purpose of cutting shingles. A small engine is used to drive a perpendicular wheel, in which are fixed two large knives that cut the shingles. Poplar blocks, say 18 inches long, and from 4 to 6 inches square are prepared, and well steamed, before they are ready for cutting, when they are held in a situation for the knives to operate upon, every revolution of the wheel cutting two shingles. The shingles are cut out very smooth and will make a roof similar to pine shingles, but perhaps will not last so long. They are much preferred to oak shingles. We understand that a similar machine has cut out 50,000 shingles in seven hours.—Zanesville Republican.

Title of Books.—Many a valuable work has been injured in its circulation, through the folly or affectation of the writer, in giving it a quaint name, not at all indicative of its contents. "The Diversions of Purley." Who could ever have supposed that this was a most profound philosophical work; probably the most elaborate ever offered to the world? Surely no human being. One of the most interesting books I have ever read on Indian affairs remained for a long time unnoticed and neglected, from the quaintness of its title. It is called "Indian Recreations." Now here probably, supposed it to be an account of the diversions of the Redmen; whereas it is an account of their manners, customs, government, policy, and population; and possesses an uncommon degree of merit.—M. Carey.

Lowell.—A correspondent of the U. S. Gazette furnishes the following interesting notice of the manufacturing capabilities of Lowel:

There are ten principal establishments with an aggregate capital of $8,250,000. These employ in their operation 28 mills exclusive of printeries &c. The whole number of looms is 4561, and of spindles 160,404. Of females employed there are are 6295; of males 2047. The annual product of all the mills, in yards, is 51,147,200. The annual consumption of cotton is 16,161, 600 lbs. or 44, 769 bales; of wool, 600,000 lbs. The kinds of goods manufactured are calicoes, sheetings, shirtings, drillings, carpeting, rugs negro cloth, broad cloth, cassimeres, and muchineary of various sorts. The consumption of anthracite coal per annum 17,000 tons; of charcoal 500,000 bushels, of wood 4,810 cords; of oil, (sperm and olive) 63,489 gallons; of starch, 510,000 lbs and of flour for starch, 3,900 bbls. The average wages of emales per week, clear of board, is 175 cts; of males clear of board, 99 cts. per day. Persons employed by the companies are paid at the close of each month; the average amount of wages per month is $100,000. A very considerable portion of the savings is deposited in the savings bank. "As regards the health of persons employed," says the paper from which the above facts are gleaned, "great numbers have been interrogated, and the result shows that six of the females out of ten enjoy better health than before being employed in the mills; of males one half derive the same advantages. As regards their moral condition and character they are not inferior to any portion of the community. There is an important omission in this statement. To enable one to form an intelligent opinion of the healthfulness of the occupation, we should be informed whether or not the health of any employed is injured.

Lowell is one of the most extraordinary phenomenon of this most extraordinary country. It is just sixteen years since the first factory was erected there, and since of course, it was merely an obscure country village, in nothing distinguished from the common herd of such in its latent capabilities. Now it counts its 20,000 inhabitants, and presents to the admiration of the thousands who annually visit it, its thirty vast piles of buildings, in which the sound of the anvil, the loom and the spindle, never ceases through the live long day. And this is but a specimen, though undoubtedly one of the most extraordinary, of the mode in which towns spring up and reach maturity in this country, where the true principle practically obtains, of letting men alone.

Lowell is 25 miles from Boston. The country through which you pass the first half of that distance, is rich in every thing that can gratify and interest the traveller. It is in a high state of cultivation: it is watered by two beautifully winding streams the Mystic and Charles Rivers; it is adorned with many elegant mansions, surrounded by picturesque grounds; it has a fine intermixture of hill and valley, woodland and cultivated field; and it is enlivened by numerous villages, embosomed in thick foliage, and full of that sweet quiet beauty, which tells at once of virtue and of thrift. I could not, in the course of my morning's flight (for we went by steam) help contrasting the villages of stern, puritan New-England, with those of the land of statues and of song bright, classic Italy. The latter show great neatness in dashiness, and appear well in painted landscapes; but a near approach to the reality breaks the charm, and filth, squalor and beggary shen become the chief ingredients of the view. But here, thanks to a kind Providence and constitutional government, the promise and the reality are in perfect harmony. While our villages are not less attractive in the distant view than those of Italy, no sudden and painful revulsion of feeling awaits you on a nearer inspection. Of filth we have a "goodly heritage," and the "lines have fallen to us in pleasant places." Let us take care that our "saddlestick be not removed out of its place"—that our "bow abide in strength."

An Elopement.—The Boston Advocate says;

"A young lady the daughter of the Hon.——, of Lynnfield left her father's house a few days since, in rather a singular manner. Mon-N—— went as she stated, to visit her friends in Danvers. After some days as she did not return, inquiry was made, but nothing could be learned concerning her. Soon however, a letter was received from her dated at New York, in which she wrote that she was married to a young man a Scotchman, who had been her father's hired man, for some two or three years—and that they were then on their way to the far West. The affair has occasioned much excitement in the little village—but as the young man had a few hundred dollars in his possession, and is a good farmer, and good character, we have no doubt they will arrive a good business" at the West.—Many a worse runaway match has happened."

At the late State Temperance Convention in Illinois, Gov.-Duncan, president of the Convention took a pen and wrote a note to the Auditor of the State for $500; being the amount of his salary as governor of the state, for the last half year, and put into the hands of the Executive committee.

Girard College.

Philadelphia, Oct. 22, 1838.

A few days ago, invited by the calmness of the air and the brilliant sunshine, I strolled several miles beyond the limits of the city. I took the Ridge road, which leads to the Girard College and the Laurel Hill Cemetery. The former is three miles from the Merchant's Exchange, in Dock street. It is situated in Penn township, on a tract of land containing forty-five acres, purchased by Mr. Girard a short time before his death for the purposes of the college.

Two large marble structures designed for the reception of pupils and the use of the professors, are already completed, or so nearly so that they could be made ready for occupancy in two or 3 weeks. The main central building, the corner stone of which was laid 5 years ago, last 4th of July, is now nearly ready for the reception of its roof. Several of the columns are up, and have received their capitals, and two are finished, having been fluted from the base to the capital. This building is 160 f et front by 217 feet on the flank including the portico. It is to be surrounded by a colonnade consisting of 34 columns of white marble, of the Corinthian order, 60 feet in height at the base, and 34 feet 6 inches high, including capitals and bases. The ascent to the portico is by 12 white marble steps, surrounding the entire building, and the pavement between the walls and the columns is 15 feet wide. Each story is separated into four apartments, 50 feet square in clear. The vestibules are each 26 ft. by 48 and are to have winding marble stairs. The whole design of the structure is after the Parthenon in Architectural Antiquities of the Grecian Colleges; but no statistics and no description can convey an adequate idea of the magnificence and noble effect of the entire edifice. The neatness and purity of the material, the vastness and harmony of the proportions, the majestic colonnade, rivaling that of the temple of Jupiter on the banks of the Ilissus, and the massive solidity of the work manship, apparently bidding defiance to every thing but an actual convulsion of nature —fill the mind with a sentiment approaching to awe. When it shall have received the finishing touch, and, the last scoffolding being removed, shall be revealed in full proportion to our gaze, it will be an object equally gratifying to the eye of taste and the heart of philanthropy. And that bosom will not then, in beholding its fair proportions and many magnificences, breathe anew the prayer so beautifully conceived and so eloquently expressed by the first president of the board of trustees, (N. Biddle, Esq.) on the occasion of laying the corner stone: "Long may the structure stand in its majestic simplicity, the pride and admiration of our latest posterity; long may it continue to yield its annual harvests of educated and moral citizens, to adorn and to defend our country. Long may each successive age enjoy its still increased benefits, when time shall have filled its halls with the memory of the mighty dead who have been reared within them, and shed over its outward beauty the mellowing hues of a thousand years of renown."

Mr. Girard himself has marked out a liberal course of study; he has allowed ample time—twelve years—for the mastery of all the sciences embraced in it; and he has expressly enjoined upon all the teachers in the College to inculcate upon the pupils the "purest principles of morality." From these things, together with the high character of the gentlemen composing the board of trustees, and of the President of the College, ought surely to be hold a sufficient guaranty that the splendid bequest of Mr. Girard will be for the blessing and not the cursing of our country. And if this be so, what imagination shall affix limits to the amount of benefits destined to spring through a long succession of ages, from their source, to the destitute orphans of our country, and through them to the whole nation? Consider the vastness of the endowments. "After the building shall have been completed," says Mr. Biddle, "there will remain the annual income from $2,000,000, now yielding $102,000, and if these funds should be inadequate for all the orphans applying for admission, the income of nearly all the remainder of the estate is appropriated to the erection of as many new buildings as his square in the city would have contained. So that, in general, it may be stated, with reasonable confidence, that when all the buildings are ready for the reception of the pupils, there will be available for the maintenance of the institution, an income of not less than $100.000, which may be increased to at least $220,000."

No one who visits the College should fail of ascending to the top. This is 125 feet above the reservoir on Fairmount, and affords the most extensive, variegated and beautiful prospect to be enjoyed any where in the neighborhood of Philadelphia; embracing the city with its district, the windings of the Delaware and Schuylkill, and a vast extent of country sprinkled with numerous villages and country seats, and diversified by hill and dale, wood and, lawn, and cultivated fields.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

The last decisive energy of a rational courage, which confides in his supreme Power, is very sublime. It makes a man who intrepidly defies every thing that can oppose or attack him within the whole sphere of morality; who would retain his purpose unshaken amidst the ruins of the world who will still press toward his object while death is impending over him.

It was the true elevation of this character that Luther, when cited to appear at the Diet of Worms, under a questionable assurance of safety from high authority, said to his friends, who conjured him not to go, and justly brought the example of John Huss, who in a similar situation, and with the same pledge of protection, had, notwithstanding, been burnt alive, "I am called in the name of God to go, and I would go, though I were certain to meet as many devils in Worms, as there are tiles on the houses."

A reader of the Bible will not forget Daniel braving in calm devotion the decree which virtually consigned him to the den of Lions; or Shadrach, Meschach and Abednego, saying to the tyrant, "We are not careful to answer thee in this matter," when the furnace was in sight.

The combination of these several essential principles, constitutes that state of mind, which is the supreme requisite, to decision of character, and perhaps its most striking distinction, that is, the full agreement of the mind with itself, the co-operation of all its powers and all its dispositions.

What an unfortunate task it would be for a character, who had harnessed a pair of horses, however strong, if he could not make them draw together; if, while one would go forward, another was restive, another struggled backward, and another started aside. If even one of the four were untractably perverse, while the three were obedient, an aged beggar with his crutch might soon leave Paxton behind. So in a human being, unless the chief forces act consentaneously, there can be no inflexible vigor, either of will or of execution. One dissentient principle in the mind, infinitely deducts so much from the strength and mass of its agency, but it counteracts and embarrasses all the rest. If the judgment holds to a low estimation that which yet the passions clime a man to pursue, his pursuit will be irregular and inconstant, though it may have occasional fits of animation, when those passions happen to be airy gly stimulated. If there is opposition between judgment and habit, though the man will probably continue to act mainly under the direction of habit in spite of his opinions, yet sometimes the intrusion of those opinions will have for the moment an effect like that of Prospero's wand on the Imps of Perdonand: and to be alternately impelled by habit, and checked by opinion, will be a state of vexatious debility. If two principal passions are opposite to each other, they will utterly distract the strongest mind. Thieves may be somewhat strong in a principle, descend into a cavern, or explore a dangerous wild; if he has the stern will of a tyrant, and yet the relentings of a man: if he has the ambition which would subdue his fellow mortals, counteracted by the humanity which would not hurt them; we can easily anticipate the irresolute contradictory character of his actions. Especially if conscience, that great troubler of the human breast, loudly declares against a man's wishes or projects, it will require no ordinary boldness, till it either reclaim the delinquent passions, or be debauched or murdered by them.

Desert of California.—This immense plain, the existence of which was, until very recently, wholly unknown, is situated in the central part of Upper or New California in Mexico. It is limited on the North by a mass of Rocks, which separate it from the head waters of the Lewis river; on the west by an irregular chain of mountains, extending in parallel ridges along the shore s of the Pacific Ocean: on the East side by the western branches of the Colorado, and on the south by the valley of the Colorad. Its area is equ l to that of Virginia, and consis of an elevated plateau of table land, flanked on all sides by coteaus, more or less steep according to their geological structure. In all its essential features this remarkable waste resembles the great Sahara of Africa. It presents little else than an arid surface, broken at intervals by a few detached mountains of limited extent; but rising in some instances above the region of perpetual snow. From these mountains, small streams flow during the rainy season. Or reaching the plains these torrents usually disappear in the sand, leaving no other trace of their existence than the fragments of rocks and other debris, which are borne down by the current and deposited at the base of the hills. No region can present a more dreary and desolate appearance. A solitary shrub or bunch of tasked deer, which in the extreme, are offered to the world! Surely no human being. objects of interest, may sometimes be seen traversing the plains. The country beyond the mountains which bounds the desert on the west is inhabited by numerous trib s of the short haired Indians. They occupy the valley of the Buenoseventura, and hunt the elk, antelope, black tailed deer, grisley bear, &c. Immediately adjoining the desert, on the north east is situated one of the most extensive lakes in this part of the continent. In common with all other isolated lakes of great extent, its waters are strongly impregnated with rock salt, which abounds in the mountains on the East.—Tanner's Notes.

Fair Play.—Mr. Curran, who was a very small man, having a dispute with a brother counsul, who was a very stout man, in which words ran high on both sides, called him out, the other however objected. "For," said he, "you are so little that I might fire at you a dozen times with no hitting; whereas the chance is, that you would shoot me at the first fire." "Upon my conscience that is true!" said Curran. "But to convince you that I don't wish to take any advantage, you may chalk my size upon your body, and all hits out of the ring shall go for nothing."

March of Intellect.—The following profound conversation took place verbatim between a master and his pupil in one of our country schools:

Master. How long ago was America discovered?

Boy. About fifty years ago, sir.

Ha! Well, when did the revolutionary war take place?

About three hundred years ago.

What did Columbus carry back with him to Spain?

The story of his voyages and discoveries by Washington Irving.

More monstrous tics.—One of the English papers under the head of "new American patent," announces the discovery of a "patent hydrophobia water proof hat, made of the skin of a mad dog, warranted not to take water." A notorious toper having expressed his surprise at this announcement, a bystander remarked, that a much more valuable water-proof article could be made out of his mouth, for it had not been known to take water these ten years.

Droll if true.—A man was found asleep in the channel of the Ohio, near Cincinnati. When seen, he was lying on his back, and his nose had burnt away all the water within boiling distance.

Fast Driving.—"Coachman," said an outside passenger to one who was driving at a furious rate over one of the most mountainous roads in the north of England, "have you no consideration for our lives and limbs?"—"What are your lives and limbs to me," was the reply: "I am behind my time!"

Economy.—A stove has been invented in this city, called the "poor man's stove," which the patentee offers to sell together with pipe and fixtures, to burn through the winter for fifteen dollars! Can any of the Boston stove men come up to this?

Nautical Travestie.—The disposition of sailors to travestie names of vessels, was amusingly exhibited to us this morning. We met two seamen in the street, one said "Well, Bill, so you are going out in the Fast Sailer' (Pharsalia.) "No," replied the other, "I've shipped in the Pulmsider," (Palmyra.)

Death of Mrs. Louisa H. Hamblin.—This lady formerly Miss. Medina, but known lately as the wife of Thomas S. Hamblin of N. Y., died suddenly in that city early on Monday morning last. She is said to have been for some time past in ailing state, from stendency of blood to the head, to which circumstances her death is ascribed. She was Hamblin's 3d wife.

POETICAL.

Selected for the Plainfield Union.

Lord Byron, to his Lady.

Be it so, we part forever!
Let the past as nothing be,
Had I lightly loved thee, never
Hadst thou been thus dear to me.

Had I loved and thus been slighted,
Then I better could have borne;
Love is quelled when unrequited,
By the rising pulse of scorn.

Pride may cool what passion hated,
Time may turn the wayward will;
But the heart in friendship cheated
Throbs with woes most maddening thrill.

Had I loved I now might hate thee,
Might in hatred, solace seek,
Might exult to execrate thee,
And in words my vengeance wreak.

But there is a silent sorrow,
Which can find no vent in speech,
Which finding relief in sorrow,
From the heights that song can reach.

Like the clankless chain enthralling,
Like the sleepless dreams that mock,
Like the frigid ice drops falling,
From the surf-surrounded rock.

Such the cold, the sickening feeling,
Thou hast caused this heart to know;
Stabbed the deeper by concealing
From the world its bitter woe!

Once it fondly, proudly deemed thee
All that fancy's self could paint;
Once it honored and esteemed thee,
As its idol and its saint.

More than woman thou wast to me
Not so man I look on thee;
Why like woman then undo me?
Why heap man's worse curse on me?

Wast thou but a friend, assuming
Friendship's smile, and woman's art,
And in borrowed beauty blooming,
Trifling with a trusting heart.

By that eye that once could glisten
With opposing glance on me;
By that ear that once could listen
To each tale I told to thee.

By that lip its scale bestowing,
Which could soften sorrow's gush,
By that cheek once bright, glowing
With pure friendship's well feigned blush.

By all those false charms united,
Thou hast wrought thy wanton will,
And wrecked confidence blighted,
What thou wouldst not kindly kill.

Yet I curse thee not in sadness,
Still I feel how dear thou were,
Oh! I could not, e'en in madness,
Doom the to thy just desert!

Live, and when my life is over,
Shoulder thine own be lengthened long,
Thou might'st then too late discover,
By thy feelings, all my wrong.

When thy beauties are all faded,
When thy flat'rers fawn me more,
Ere the autumn shroud hath shaded,
Some regarded reptile's store.

Ere that hour, false syren hear me,
Thou shalt feel what I do now,
While my spirit hov'ring near thee,
Whispers friendship's broken vow.

But 'tis useless to upbraid thee,
With thy past or present state,
What thou wert my fancy made thee,
What thou art I knew too late.

Lady Byron's Answer.

Yes, farewell! Farewell forever,
Thou thyself hast fixed our doom,
Bade hopes sweetest blossoms wither,
Never more for me to bloom.

Unforgiving, thou hast called me,
Didst thou ever say, forgive?
For the wretch whose wiles enthralled thee,
Thou didst seem alone to live.

Short the span time hath given
To complete thy love's decay,
By unhallowed passions driven,
Soon thy heart was taught to stray.

Love for me, that feeling tender,
Which thy vows as well can show,
From my arms why didst thou wander?
My endearments why forego?

Wrapt in dreams of joy abiding,
On thy breast my head hath lain,
In thy love and truth confiding,
Bliss I cannot know again.

But by Heaven's recording spirit,
May that wish forgotten be,
Like, though now a load, I'd bear it,
For the sake I've borne to thee

In whose lovely features, let me
All my weakness here confess,
While the struggling tears permit me,
All her father's, I can trace,

His whose image never leaves me,
Whose remembrance yet I prize,
Who this bitterest feeling gives me,
Still to love where I despise.

With regret and sorrow rather,
When our child's first accents flow,
Pshall teach her to say, Father,
But his guilt she no'er shall know.

Whilst to-morrow and to-morrow,
Wake me to a widow's bed,
In another's arms, no sorrow
Will thou feel, nor tear will shed.

For the world's applause I sought not,
When here myself from thee,
Of its praise or blame I thought not,
What's its praise or blame to me?

Here whom my soul delighted,
From his heart my image drove,
With contempt my truth requited,
And preferred a wanton's love.

Thou art proud, and mark me, Byron,
I've a soul as proud as thine.

Soft to love, but hard as iron,
When despite on me is thrown.

But farewell! I'll not upbraid thee,
Never, never wish thee ill,
Wretched though thy crimes have made me,
If thou cease, be happy still.

The Wit and Humor of the South Sea Islanders.—A few years ago, a venerable and esteemed brother Missionary came to England; and being rather bald, some kind friends provided him with a wig. Upon his return to the Island, the chief and others went on board to welcome him; and after the usual salutations, one of them said to the Missionary, "You were bald when you left, and now you have a beautiful head of hair; what amazing people the English are!! How did they make your hair grow again?" "You simple people," replied the Missionary, "how does every thing grow? Is it not by sowing seed?" They immediately shouted, "Oh, these English people! they sow seed upon a bald man's head to make the hair grow!" One shrewd fellow inquired "if he had brought any of the seed with him?" The good Missionary carried on the joke for a short time, and then raised his wig. The revelation of his original head, of course drew forth a roar of laughter, which was greatly increased when one of the natives shouted to some of his countrymen who were near—"Here see Mr. R——! he has come from England with his head thatched!"

PORTRAIT OF JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.—A number of the political and personal friends of Mr. Adams, requested him to sit for portrait, and employed Mr. Page, a young artist of great merit and growing reputation, to execute the work. The portrait is just completed. It represents the distinguished statesman in a sitting posture, and exhibits the entire figure of the person. The subscribers met at the artist's room yesterday afternoon to decide upon the disposition that should be made of it. A committee, consisting of Jonathan Phillips, Abbot Lawrence, Richard Fletcher, Elias G. Loring, Nath. I. Bowditch, and Daniel P. Parker, was instructed to retire, and after consultation, report upon that point.—And after a few minutes absence, the committee returned, and reported unanimously, that the portrait should be presented to the city to be placed in Faneuil Hall, which report was accepted, and the same committee was instructed to perform the duty of presentation. A vote of approbation to the artist for his skill and fidelity in the execution of the picture was then proposed and adopted.

The thanks of the subscribers were also presented to Mr Adams (who was present) for the gratification he had afforded them in consenting to their wishes. Mr. Adams replied very briefly but with evident emotion, indicating that such a testimonial of respect, confidence and affection, was most grateful to his feelings. He was manifestly taken somewhat by surprise, and the fullness of the heart seemed to preclude entirely all deliberate choice of language.—Boston Cour.

A Woman's Firmness.—A case of a novel character occurred yesterday in the U. States Circuit Court at Providence. The Providence Courier says:—A young lady of very interesting appearance, and respectable character was brought up by the marshall for refusing to be sworn, and to give her testimony before the grand jury. Justice Story addressed her in a very eloquent and respectful manner; and with all the kindness of a father, urged upon her the duty and the necessity of persons giving testimony, to promote the cause of justice, and the public safety. He informed her, that, however painful to him, the law left no discretion for him to exercise; and that if she persisted in her refusal, the only course he could pursue, was, to commit her to jail, and to keep her there till she should con ent to take the oath.

True to her woman's nature, she replied instantur, and without hesitation, that she would go to jail rather than be sworn, and was condemned accordingly. It seems that a young gentleman to whom addresses she was not inclined to favor, had written her two letters, which she suffered to remain in the post office. Another young gentleman took one of the letters from the post office, and delivered it to the lady, who received it with the seal broken; and the young lady was summoned by the letter writer, as a witness against the letter bearer, and from some cause best known to herself, she refused to make oath.

Since the above was in type, we learn that the young lady has been liberated, and returned to her friends.—Boston Transcript of Saturday.

☞ Dyery and Print Works.—We refer the reader to the advertisement of Messrs. Hale & Jones, in another column. The advantages of this establishment is great; possessed of water power second to none in the state, and ample, secure and commodious buildings, for the execution of orders on a large scale, they are every way prepared to dye, restore, and refinish silks, merinos, and all other kinds of fine goods.

The easy access to and from Railway, by means of Railroads and stages, renders the above establishment of important consequence to the merchants, ladies, and citizens, generally of Newark, Elizabeth, New Brunswick, Perth Amboy, Somerville, Princeton, Trenton, &c. in which places agencies have, or will be established by the enterprising proprietors.—Rahway Her.

"No Shoemaker on the Island," is the lonely postscript to a letter from the city of Galveston. We can scarcely credit it, that not a solitary member of the roving "craft," has yet taken up his abode in the chief commercial mart of Texas. But so it is. The son of Crispin who shall first "douse the kit" in that sole less region, will not we are certain, find it a boot less adventure.—Sussex Register.

Banks are now springing up in every part of the state of New York, under the law of that state authorizing private banking; and if such institutions can furnish an abundant supply of a wholesome circulating medium, they are in a fair way to do it. We perceive that most of them provide for an almost interminable legal existence and a great increase of capital. Generally speaking, these institutions are now in responsible hands, and give good promise of being honestly conducted.—N. B. Freedonian.

Life Restored by Electricity.—An English paper gives an interesting account of an instance where suspended animation was restored by electricity. A little girl fell head foremost into a butt of rain water in the back yard of a house in London. When dragged out she was quite cold, and all the usual remedies were tried for a length of time by Surgeon W. B. Parkes, without success. As a last resource, Mr. Parkes applied the stimulus of electricity. He first passed shocks gently through the head and chest, along the spine, gradually increasing their power and persevering during the whole time [by means of other assistence] in the inflation of the lungs. After these means had been employed conjointly for about ten minutes, faint traces of respiration were observed, and in three quarters of an hour he had the pleasure to behold his patient in a fair way of recovery. The child is now in the enjoyment of perfect health.

Discovery of a new Continent.—M. Doubouzel, an officer attached to the French expedition to the south Pole has written a letter dated Valparaiso, March 20, confirming the details given by M. D. D'Urville. A new circumstance mentioned by him is the discovery of a great continent to the South of South Shetland. "We carefully explored and determined," says that officer "forty leagues of coast, notwithstanding the surrounding ice. This discovery is of real service to nautical and geographical science.

Bad.—There is a most unwelcome report abroad to day, nothing less than that the late collector of this port Samuel Swartwout Esq. who is now in Europe, has left his accounts deficient some million and a quarter.

It is undoubtedly true that a Treasury clerk is here from Washington, in consequence of apparent difficulties in the Custom house books, and as things appear, there is defalcation like that stated. Mr. Swartwout was understood claimed to retain a considerable amount in his hands on account of suits against him for over-paid duties, and other unsettled matters, but nothing like the account now apparently minus.—Journal of Commerce.

The Whig Shower.—The N. Y. Evening Post thus announces to its partizan readers the overwhelming defeat of the Administration;

"Is that shower over yet?" said Charles Fox to a friend whom he had left 6 months before at Killarney, under the rainy sky of Ireland. "Is that shower over yet?" say we to ourselves, as we unfold, one after another, the journals from the country, and the letters of our correspondents, announcing majorities for the Whig ticket in the interior counties. No, the shower is not over yet: it rains cats and dogs in the Western counties of the State, and Seward is Governor by a majority of 10,000.

Flour Speculators.—The streets of New Orleans, Nov. 7th were again flooded with heavy rains, but the city is suffering from the low stage of the waters above preventing the arrival of produce. Forestallers, as usual, taking advantage of the calamity, had bought up all the flour in the interior counties. No, the shower is not over yet: it rains cats and dogs in the Western counties of the State, and Seward is Governor by a majority of 10,000.

Great Mortality West.—A gentleman of Montezuma, who has just returned from a tour up the Mississippi, states that the Bilious Fever has prevailed in the state of Illinois, on the Ogles river, to such an extent that he saw in one grave yard three hundred and fifty graves that had not been sent with rain, it not having rained for about 40 days. Of 1500 workmen who commenced on the Illinois and Chicago canal this spring, between 900 and a thousand had died at the time our informant was there.—Auburn Journal of Wednesday.

Bread Stuff from Ohio.—From the 20th Oct. to Nov. 6th, the shipments east from Cleaveland were 95,495 bushels of wheat and 8,612 barrels of flour, except the produce of steamboats.

Gen Gaines has furnished the New Orleans Bulletin with a diagram of a system of National roads, planned by him to diverge from Tennessee and Kentucky as the centre, to the prairie and western frontier, and the Atlantic coast and lake shores at various points from N. Orleans to Portland. The editor says;—

"An inspection of the diagram shows Kentucky and Tennessee to be the centre from which Rail roads branch out to all points of the Union, connecting for instance, New Orleans with Portland in Maine; Buffalo and Pittsburgh in New York; Detroit, in Michigan; Chicago, in Illinois; Charleston, S. C., Fort Gibson, in Arkansas; St. Louis in Missouri; and several other points still farther to the Far West. The work, says Gen. Gaines, is designed in time of war to enable us to wield our fighting men, with their arms ammunition, from central and middle states to the most vulnerable points of attack on our sea board and inland border, in one tenth part of the time and at one tenth part of the expense that movements would cost on ordinary roads. It is a work, moreover, calculated to bind the states together by ligaments, rendered indissoluble by its great and imperishable utility to the states and people in general, giving safety to our national independence, encouragement to literature and science, profitable extension to agriculture, and protection to the manufacturing and mechanic arts, thereby tending to make our beloved country prosperous and happy in peace and impregnable in war."

From the Newark Daily Advertiser.

THE CANADA WAR.

A Battle—Patriots Victorious.—Between the "Mormons" of the South and the "Patriots" of the North, the country seems destined to be disturbed once more with bloody war. We give below the particulars of the battle at Prescott, U. C. opposite Ogdensburg, on Tuesday morning last, which must have been anticipated by the movements of the Patriots as published in our last. The Ogdensburg Times of Tuesday gives some particulars not embodied in the account below. The patriots had landed on the Canada side and were stationed around a Wind mill on a promentory of 26 feet elevation above the St. Lawrence. The wind mill is a circular, massive stone building, affording ample shelter against any shot that the patriots were prepared to throw.

Early in the morning the armed steamboats Cobourg, and Traveller arrived with troops. About 7 o'clock the armed boats opened a fire on the party at the wind mill. The cannonading between the Wind mill and the three boats continues to be the scene of attraction till nearly 8 o'clock, when a line of fire blazed along the summit of the hill for about eighty or a hundred rods and the crack of the rifle and musket made a continuous roar. The scene was one of the most intense excitement and solicitude. The reflection that men full of high hopes and ardent expectations, were falling by hundreds, was calculated to awaken the most painful emotions.

The rebel forces were in three detachments—one occupying the Wind-mill, another a stone building, and the 3d were posted on the brow of the hill, and sustained most of the morning's work. The British appear to have been d scomfitted three times during the day, and it is added that the field is covered with dead and wounded soldiers of the government, while, so far as was known but 13 of the rebels had fallen. The schooners which brought the invading forces were taken by the officers of the U. S. for breach of neutrality, though one of them was a British vessel.

The steamer Great Britain was burnt at the wharf in Kingston, on Sunday night. She was fitting out as a government vessel, to be employed against the patriots.

Thursday morning Nov. 16.

During the night nothing of consequence has taken place. The river has been covered with boats; some attempting to reach Wind mill point from this side, and others engaged to prevent it. Several boats were fired upon during the night, and so far as we can learn no boats reached the Wind Mill.

A gentleman of veracity, who crossed above last night, reports that it is supposed that the royal party sustained a loss of about 50 in the engagement on Tuesday, and that they had not been able to remove the dead from the battle field That all the suspected persons, and those who refused to take arms, have been arrested and confined—that Col. Youngie not killed—that an express arrived from Lower Canada, urging the people of Upper Canada to come to their relief—that they were assaulted and beaten on every side that their officers were principally killed, and the whole country in utmost disorder, that all the regular troops had been withdrawn from Prescott and sent up the country.

Rumors from other sources state that the U. States was fired upon in the river as she passed; that a rising has taken place in the neighborhood of Gananoque; but all these reports must be taken with many grains of allowance. That some trouble has broken out above is almost certain, from the sudden withdrawal of the armed boats and a large portion of the regular troops from this neighborhood while the revolutionists hold the field.

This morning about 7 o'clock a fire was opened on the Wind Mill by a heavy piece of ordnance and returned by the revolutionists. The British occupying a position on the rise of land below the wind mill and are sheltered by buildings. At about 8 o'clock it is believed that the revolutionary party made a sortie and beat them back, and fired the buildings behind which the royalists formed.

Two large buildings are enveloped in flames and the firing of artillery has ceased. It is highly probable that the ordnance fell into the hands of the revolutionists as the retreat of the royalists was sudden and irregular.

The artillery company of this village have been on duty all night as an armed police to keep order and protect the property of our citizens.

From the Albany Argus, of Nov. 20th.

A correspondent of Clayton, Jefferson county, encloses us a proclamation to the patriots of Canada, signed "J. Ward BIRGE, Brigadier general commanding, Eastern Division" post marked "Clayton, N. Y. Nov. 16." On the back of the letter is the following brief announcement of the fate of the Patriot force embodied at Wind Mill point, below Prescott:

"The patriots are all killed, or taken prisoners. Nov. 16th."

The actual command, it is said, was exercised by Von Shultz, a Pole, who served with Napoleon, and who recently left New York city with $2000 in gold, from the Patriots there. Bill Johnson is on this side of the river. It is also said that O. B. Pierce, an itinerant lecturer on grammar and phrenology, had the actual command of the steamer United States during her last perilous trip, and displayed a good deal of spirit, standing on the wheel house and cheering the men, while the balls were flying around.

Platoon firing was heard in Prescott Tuesday evening, supposed to be the execution of martial law upon the patriot prisoners.

Not a man from the Canada side joined the patriots!!!

Later.—A letter in the Watertown Jeffersonian furnishes the following additional intelligence:

Telegraph steamboat, in the service U. S.
Off Ogdensburg, Nov. 16th.

I have just returned from witnessing the severe contest between the invading force and the British troops, near Prescott. The former were posted in a stone windmill, and several adjacent stone buildings; and in the over confidence of their position, rejected, it is said, services offered to withdraw them.

About two o'clock to-day, heavy floating batteries took position, and opened from the river a de, while the British troops, regular and militia closed them on the land side. After a severe cannonnading and bombardment, they were driven from the buildings; when an effort was made to escape into the country. But here they were met by a heavy and rapid fire; and when the sun went down, the last shot probably told the death of the last man of them.

They were mostly young men of Jefferson co. and behaved with a constancy and courage worthy of a better cause. But their tale is told.

Of the "entire population ready to revolt," as they were taught to believe, three only joined them. In some instances, the people whose houses individuals visited to instigate revolt, seized upon them and consigned them to prison; and the militia fought like devils.

* * * *

The battle was splendid—about 2000 fighting at a time.—It is computed that about 80 were killed, and the rest taken prisoners.

The Montreal Herald of the 19th states that a Court Martial had been constituted, and the trial of the prisoners would take place forthwith.

☞ By the Newark Daily of Friday evening last, we learn that the patriots lost 6 killed, and 112 prisoners—among the killed were two Generals, Brown and Phillips—among the prisoners, Com. Von Shult, and the notorious Bill Johnson. The British lost 45 killed and wounded, of all ranks.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, November 27, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

New Jersey Legislature.

Friday, Nov. 16th.

In Council, it was moved that both the majority and minority reports on the Cumberland contested election, with all the evidence, be printed, —lost, 5 ayes to 9 noes.

It was subsequently resolved by an unanimous vote, that 1,000 copies of both reports, without the evidence, be printed.

The report of the majority permitting Mr. Foster, the whig candidate, to retain his seat, was taken up and passed.

In the Assembly, it was resolved that 1000 copies of both reports with the evidence, be printed for the use of the people.

The report of the majority, recommending that Messrs. Bonham, whig, and Whitacer and Jones, administration men, be admitted to their seats, was taken up and passed.

The whig member was admitted by a vote of 27 to 19,—the two administration men unanimously. The two committees arrived at this result, the whig papers state, by rejecting all the illegal votes, and counting the remainder. It appears there were 22 illegal administration votes, and 6 illegal whig votes, which were, and ought to have been, subtracted from their respective returns, and gave the above result.

Saturday, Nov. 17.

Both houses adjourned to meet again on Tuesday, the 15th day of January next.

Whig Celebration.

The Whigs of the township of Westfield, and the adjacent townships, will meet at Thomas J. Barr's at the Scotch Plains, on Tuesday evening the 27th inst. to commemorate the recent whig victories in New Jersey, NEW YORK, and other states. Supper will be on the table precisely at 7 o'clock. The whigs generally are invited to participate in the celebration of the above victories, the most decided and important that have taken place since the present administration came into power.

James Leonard, Noah Drake,
Alfred Berry, Dennis Coles,
Samuel K. Stevenson, Elston Marsh,
John Randolph, Gideon Ross,
Ephraim Clark,
Committee of Arrangement.

Nov. 19, 1838.

☞ An address is expected from A. C. M. Pennington, Esq. of Newark, who has accepted an invitation to attend the celebration.

In the 4th district in Vermont, in which at the former election there was no choice, at a recent election, Mr. John Smith, the administration candidate, was elected to Congress, by a majority of 600 or 800. Vermont therefore sends to Congress 3 whigs and 2 administration men.

The Newark Daily Advertiser says that the question of which party has the ascendency in the Georgia Legislature, was fairly settled against the Administration on the 10th inst. On that day the two houses on joint ballot, elected five state officers, and all the persons chosen are opposed to Mr. Van Buren.

We perceive with pleasure that Mr. Alexander Ming, Jr. who held an important office in the N. York Custom house, has been removed from office, in consequence of his taking an active part in favor of the Canada insurgents. Most surely he ought to have been removed. Office holders should be the last persons to break the laws.

The Steam packet Liverpool, about which there has been much anxiety, arrived in New-York, on Friday morning last. She left Liverpool, Oct. 20th, but on the 26th, were obliged to put back, on account of the fear that her coal would not hold out. She put into Cork Oct. 28, and remained one week, and arrived in New-York, 17 days from Cork. About half of her passengers left her at Cork.

A tremendous storm took place in London, on Oct. 28th, which did much damage.

On the 25th, a powder mill near Mons, Belgium, blew up. 11 men were killed—damage, $75,000.

A terrible explosion took place in a coal-pit, at Lowca, near Whitehaven, by which 40 of the workmen were killed.

The Royal William, which left New York, on the 20th Oct. arrived at Liverpool, Nov. 5.

It is ascertained that the whigs have a majority in the Delaware legislature, and consequently a whig U. S. Senator will be chosen. The U. S. Representative is a Van Buren man.

More slaughter of the Mormons—War Ended.—The St. Louis papers of the 8th give us the gratifying intelligence that the mormon war was ended on the 28th ult. by the surrender of their prophet Joe Smith. On that day 2000 men commanded by Gen. Atchinson, of Clay county made their appearance, before the town of Far West the county seat of Caldwell county, where the Mormons were entrenched. Upon their approach the Mormons hoisted a white flag, which was shot down by Capt. Bogard, but was immediately replaced. Gen. Atchinson then sent in a message with a view to learn their wishes and intentions, when six of the leaders avowed their willingness to surrender, in the expectation that the Mormons should be unharmed. The surrender was accepted: and the individuals put under guard. Their names are Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, George Hinkle, Lyman Wight, Parley P. Pratt, and Mr. Knight. The Mormons assembled at Far West, comprized seven hundred men under arms. Of this number a small body of 150, retreated and pursued their way to the northern frontier.

On the day after the order of Gov. Boggs directing the expulsion or extermination of the Mormons was received by Gen Atkinson. Disgusted with such a command, he immediately resigned his office, and retired. Subsequent to this it is reported that a number of the mormons was set upon and murdered.

The Bulletin of the 9th, adds the following later intelligence:

A party of Mormons who had fortified themselves in a house were attacked by the volunteers under the command of Gen. Lucas, and thirty-two of them were killed—seven of the volunteers were wounded and one killed. It is further stated that the Governor had issued orders to Gen. Clark to retain as many of the volunteer companies as was necessary, to keep the Mormons prisoners until the meeting of the Legislature.

New Orleans, Nov. 7th.

Provisions are extremely high in our own city—so much so, that we are often surprised, how the poor and unemployed classes manage to subsist. Our sister city of Natchez too, appears to suffer from exhorbitant prices. The following articles were selling at the city market of Natchez on Saturday last, at the prices quoted:

Butter, per lb.	88 cts.
Eggs, per doz.	75
Meal, per peck,	1 00
Cabbages, per head,	25
Irish potatoes, per doz.	50
Onions, per doz.	12

Signs of Haste.—The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, the Springfield (Illinois) Journal, the St. Louis Bulletin, and the Louisville City Gazette, have each raised the Harrison flag.—Newark Daily.

A Keen one.—The Baltimore Transcript states, that one merchant in that city having received information that another would fail on the following day, proceeded to his house in the evening, and requested payment of $800, which was his due. The debtor drew his check for the amount, and the creditor presented it at the bank as soon as it opened the next morning. The check was dishonored, on the ground of not sufficient funds; the merchant inquired how much was wanting; and was told $150. He then handed the cashier $150 requesting that it should be put to the credit of the drawer. This done, the check was presented and paid of course. This is a little the keenest practice we have ever heard of, and the operator must have been a yankee.

The sunflower is not only valuable as provender for cattle, and feed for poultry, but as a medicine. A tea made of it, and sweetened with honey, is quite as good, if not better, than that made of flaxseed, in catarrhal affections. We are not acquainted with the average weight of the seed of the sun flower; in our reading we have seen it affirmed, they yield almost their weight in oil, and it is stated the oil burns almost as well as the best sperm, with the exception of forming a slight crust around the top of the wick. We consider a little more general attention is not given to the cultivation of a plant available for so many economical and useful purposes.—Jeffersonian.

An Assorted Cargo.—The New Orleans Picayune of the 6th says:

The steamboat Louisville, from St. Louis, arrived at this port on Sunday morning, bringing 346 men, women, and children; 1891 turkeys, geese, ducks and chickens; 137 horses; 30 head of cattle; 23 hogs; 22 mules.

67 "An honest man's, the noblest work of God!" So says Pope. Now, what is the pe plus ultra of honesty? the cap sheaf? the quint. essence of honesty? Here we have it in the person of a venerable gentleman recently deceased in Watertown, Mass. He had taken the Boston Centinel for nearly half a century—and—PAID FOR IT, all the while, well may you bite your lips.—Rahway Herald.

James S. Nevius, Esq. a respectable counsellor at law of our city, has been appointed by the Legislature of this State, Justice of the Supreme Court. The appointment is a judicious one, as Mr. Nevius possesses every requisite quality to make a good judge. His legal attainments are amply sufficient, and we have no doubt he will prove a worthy member of the bench.—N. Brunswick Times.

The river is in good navigable order, and likely to continue so. On Thursday night a heavy rain fell during nearly the whole night. Boats are running down very fast, and several are daily expected up.—Wheeling Times.

Warning for Stage Proprietors.—At the late U. S. Circuit in Maryland, Judges Taney and Heath, presiding, Elizabeth K. Henry, recovered damages against G. Beltzhoover and Co., for the negligence and carelessness of defendants' driver, whereby the stage belonging to them and running between Baltimore and York, in the year 1836, was upset and the Plaintiff injured. The jury returned a verdict of five hundred dollars damages.

Loco. Foco Rhetoric.—It is stated that Jesse A. Bynum, in his dinner speech at the Caswell Court house, speaks of Mr. Preston the Senator from South Carolina, as the "bladdery-blowing watery headed South Carolina Senator, whose arrogance and audacity are only equalled by the weakness of his head, from which, if shakened a month, there would not drop a practical idea."

A Proclamation,

BY WILLIAM PENNINGTON,

Governor of the State of New Jersey.

WHEREAS, it is the privilege as well as the duty of all Christian States and communities to acknowledge their dependence upon Almighty God, and to be grateful for his numberless mercies and blessings; and as no portion of our land has greater cause for thankfulness than the people of New Jersey, not only for the common bounties of his Providence, but especially for the signal measures of health experienced through our whole community—

Now therefore in view of these blessings, and in conformity with long established usage, I do hereby designate THURSDAY, the 29th day of November inst. as a day of public Thanksgiving and prayer, and I do recommend to the citizens of this state, that abstaining on that day from all ordinary and unnecessary labor, they assemble in their accustomed places of religious worship, and unite with the many thousands in other states of the Union in sincere thanks and praise to the Great Author of all our mercies for his continued goodness and unmerited kindness, for the health, peace and plenty which pervade our land for our religious liberty, for our free institutions, and for just and equal laws, ensuring to the hand of industry the fruit of its labor, and exteuding their mild and safe protection over our persons and property.

Given under my hand at the city of Trenton, this tenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.

WM. PENNINGTON.

Stoves,

Cheaper than ever!

J. THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally, that they have now on hand a large assortment of Stoves of the most approved patterns, for burning coal or wood; and as they wish to close their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they were ever before offered in this market. Their assortment consists of Stanley's Rotary of all sizes, Pentley's, Church & Stanley's, James', and all sizes of the nine plate.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low; they consist chiefly of Pentley's, Cheeseman's, Lyon's, James', Onley's, Wilcox, Gills' and Nine Plates; they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat, we shall only that they are now made handsomer and better than ever; and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended as Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Fever, Biliousness, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them to my family, I must in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and to the public that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine. I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and it resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit in many complaints as recommended, especially for ascaricides worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness as the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick headache or dispepsia, they are a sure and efficacious cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens generally behind no efforts for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expire. All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

THE Subscriber, after repeated unsuccessful attempts to find a purchaser of an establishment rendered by injury sustained several years since, is finally but reluctantly compelled to relinquish the business of newspaper printing. To any person wishing to enter in a permanent and lucrative occupation, this opportunity offers great advantages, as the establishment combines the materials and good will of the Advocate and Herald and has served in the place of both rendering it one of the best establishments in the state

The materials consist of two excellent iron presses, 1 wooden Ramage do. standing press with boards complete, and a full assortment of newspaper and job types, from 14 line pica to minion, and every other article necessary for conducting the business with profit.

For further information apply to David Poh, Esq. Stationer's Hall, 245 Pearl st. New York; M. F. Carman, New Brunswick; Editor Daily Advertiser, Newark, or in Rahway, to E. Y. Rogers, Esq. or

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its object aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each commence yearly. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected hos ever at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on a southeast bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is east of access at all seasons of the year, either by the public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices of the most choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and opposition of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, &c. chronicles, and a variety of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, these desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of unlumbered others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its typography, and elegance of its paper, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superior, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant for the same price, is of equivalence for the trifling amount at which it is offered per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a large, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, unrivalled for the beauty of its typography, and for the general excellence of its contents; the whole forming a single word or sentence that would obtain a pleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of taste, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Dunning-street, in front of Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super-royal quarto engraving on steel, and once a month with a number of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, &c. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, payable in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. Subscriptions received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

POETICAL.

For the Plainfield Union.

To a Lady.

Who asked the author to write some Poetry on her.

Oh! sweet is the music which beauty inspires,
And sweet is the song of the soul;
When the brain is illumed by the heart's glowing fire,
And the graces the subject control!

You ask a poor bard all your charms to rehearse,
And the task would make apathy warm;
But no pencil can picture, or pen paint in verse,
What a God must have studied to form!

The poor silly insect that thoughtlessly plays
Round the flame which is prepared with fate,
While lured by the lustre, is scorched in the blaze,
And feels the fell danger too late,—

So the poet presumptuous, who dares to portray
The likeness of charms such as thine,
Must imbibe the strong poison that lurks in lay,
And wound his own heart in the line!

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Baltimore Monument for October.

A Folly Cured.

BY MISS A. M. F. BUCHANAN.

"What care I, maidens, though his name
Be an unmeet for song or story?" Anne Song.

"Ned! brother Ned! just listen here!—Married at——, on—— Jonas Jenkins, Esq. to Miss Helen Scott;"—Jonas Jenkins! ha! ha! who would ever have dreamed that a girl of Helen Scott's taste could marry a man with a name like that! Jonas Jenkins! Mrs. Jonas Jenkins!—how it sounds!"

"Well, Clara, 'what's in a name?'"

"Nothing!—Marie's anything I do detest as much as a vulgar name, it is a hackneyed quotation!"

"Humph!—I was going to add, however, that your friend Helen has made what her circle would call an excellent match. I know Jenkins well. He is a man of fine person, fine abilities and yet more, fine fortune."

"And what of all that with such a name?—I would not marry an Apollo, endowed with Fortune's purse if so he bore a name like that!"

"Absurd!"

"You need not look as quizzical."

"So what?

"You know my notion about names long ago, Edward."

"I thought I had cured you of them long ago Clara."

"No, indeed! I don't intend to be cured as long as I have reason on my side. Such names as Johnson, Jackson, Thompson, mean nothing at all; but names like Howard, or Seldney, or Herbert would do!—ha! ha! ha!

"Exactly!" and Clara Calvert ran out of the room to escape her brother's raillery.

"We must rid her of this folly," remarked Edward, gravely, to his elder sister Gertrude, who was now at home for the first time after leaving it as a bride, and who sat smiling at the colloquy.

Clara re-appeared.

"I had intended, Clara," said Edward, "to invite my friend William Benson to visit me this summer, but am now induced to change my mind."

"You mean the young man who took half the honors from you at college, and who delivered that oration so full of every thing sublime and beautiful, and original which I admired so much, when I read it?"

"The very same, but I have concluded that his common name might prevent you from receiving him as he deserves. Your etymological skill might make the disagreeable discovery through it that one of his ancestors was the son of a man named Ben."

Clara looked a little confused;—"You know I wouldn't mind that in your friend, though."

"Notwithstanding, I shall not submit him to your confusion."—returned Edward, as he left her.

The next evening Clara and her sister were sitting together in the parlor—

"In dark, ere stars were lit or candles brought in" the latter looking musingly out upon the twilight and the former thoughtlessly twining her guitar, still play that old air, 'Days of absence for you Ger.' said she; 'I know you're thinking about Henry, ain't you?'

As she spoke Edward ushered a gentleman into the room, introducing,—"My sisters Mrs Hamly and Miss Calvert, my friend Mr Demjohn."

Clara sat for a moment as if understood then gave a nudge of unmistakable import to Gertrude, who with her usual laily like composure had commenced addressing the stranger. "I wonder what he can look like; thought she; "his voice at all events, does not sound as if it came out of a dead john!" It was very melodious, and his reply to her sister particularly graceful, yet still she feared to speak lest a word might bring her ill-suppressed laugh altogether out with it.

At length the lamps were lighted and Clara eagerly surveyed the visitor. He was what her young lady friends would have pronounced, "decidedly a very elegant looking fellow;" phrase of course too hackneyed to be taken up by her fastidious lips. And his features were remarkably handsome, and wore an expression which proved the bumps of mirth conspicuous on his well developed forehead by no means misplaced, and which could not fail to be attractive to a damsel as vivacious as the one engaged in the scrutiny

The conversation of the visitor was so fascinating that Clara's risibility soon yielded to it, and before an hour she caught herself wishing from the bottom of her heart that she should have been name so just to give it rise. "Poor man! how much he is to be pitied;" she said to herself; "with conceptions and sensibilities such as he must have, to talk as he does, how well he must be aware of the bad cognomen of his name and how keenly he must feel it!" and when he had taken leave for the night, her compassion would not allow her to finish the jest she had thought it necessary to attempt at his expense.

The gentleman called again in the next morning, and Clara was yet more pleased with him by day light than she had been the evening before, and by no means dissatisfied when her brother told her that he had invited his friend to pass a few days in the family. "He is a very interesting man," s in she, and she fell into a deep study. A ray of hope shot across her mind. Perhaps the first name might be more agreeable. She question'd Edward accordingly.

"None again" returned he, raising his finger.

"I am sure I have an excuse for it now," replied Clara, almost seriously.

"Well, here is his card."

Clara snatched it eagerly; "Jonx M. Davidson! forgive me, Edward, but,——really, I can't help laughing! it is such a very absurd name!—you must confess that yourself."

Edward and Gertrude both smiled.

Mr. Davidson—for surely such a name in her nervous soon became domesticated among them. Edward a competent judge in matters of that kind, held his talents and attainments in high estimation. Gertrude believed him to be as superior in character as intellect, and Clara herself thought him the most polished gentleman she had ever seen. He accompanied her music to her utmost satisfaction; read exquisitely, was an admirable litterateur, in short he possessed in conversation, a degree of attraction in view, the consequences may be guessed.

Mr. D——— a visit had been lengthened to better than a month, when, one morning when he had been screwing the keys of Clara's guitar for some minutes while she sat working near him, he stopped suddenly, and announced his intention of making his departure the next day.

Clara started and endeavored to raise her eyes to his face but they would not obey her, and the instantly after she snapped two strings.

The gentleman arose, and on gaining it again the two till the strings vibrated; picked up a sheet of music and threw it down again, opened his lips as if twice was something to be said, but did not succeed in getting it out and abruptly turned from the room.

"Oh! how I wish Gertrude were here!" half sobbed Clara. Gertrude had felt the week before.

Edward entered. "Why Clara, child! what's the matter? Is the matter? Look up, child, why open my word, your eyes are quite red!—how could you have so little taste as to sit with a gentleman in that fram? let's hear what ails you!"

"Nothing, brother Edward!"

"Is that all! On then! I need not concern myself about you;—I have needed to do so a long something else though; Demjohn intends leaving us to morrow;—and he tells me he is really, that you seem so much agitated at my news as my young lady could be with all serious aspirations to become Mrs John M. Demjohn."

Clara burst into tears.

Edward paused a moment and then went on; "You don't usually let my teasing distress you so, Clara I beg pardon. But to our subject. I have not asked him to prolong his stay; I think it best to allow the poor fellow to go whilst he is so. It is remnant of his heart is safe with you, which would certainly not be the case if he remained much longer with you. As it is I found it necessary to give him a hint of your prejudice, about names, and left him to infer that, of course his suit would be hopeless."

"O, Edward! how could you!"—interrupted Clara, "do! I beg you, think of my folly my misery!"

"I must, and will, Clara, till I know you are cured of it."

"Is I am, indeed, altogether!"

"Are you sure, quite sure?"

"Dear Edward, for pity's sake don't jest now."

"Well, I've no objections to believe you, but there are others to be convinced of it myself," said her brother, beckoning through a window to his guest who immediately joined them; "and first of all, Benson, here—my dear friend, William Benson;—don't get so pale, Clara, why—what frightens you?—this name surely is not more terrible than John M. Demjohn, is it? You may debate that point between yourselves, however, and in half an hour or so I will be in again to hear your decision."

A week or two after, Gertrude received a letter from Edward, of which a passage run thus: "And lastly, dear Ger, our plot succeeded admirably. Benson endured the ordeal, until I was convinced she would have gladly shared it with him, and now, of course, though she is not sorry that he is rid of it, as who would be? I think the whim is pretty fairly eradicated. You and Henry must hurry back, as soon as possible to instruct the young folks in the duties of married life, for B. is urgent to assume them, and, in spite of my better judgment, has persuaded our little Sis that it s he is quite advanced enough in reason and years for their comprehension and fulfilment."

Decisions of Character, by Foster.

Lady Macbeth may be cited as a harmonious character, though the epithet seems strangely applied. She had capacity, ambition and courage; and she willed the death of the king. Macbeth had still more capacity, ambition, and courage; and he also willed the murder of the king. But he had, besides, humanity, generosity, conscience, and some measure of what forms the power of conscience, the fear of a superior Being. Consequently, when the dreadful moment approached, he felt an insupportable conflict between these opposite principles, and when it was arrived, his utmost courage failed. The worst part of his nature fell prostrate under the power of the better; the angel of goodness arrested the demon that grasped the dagger, and would have taken that dagger away, if the pure demoniac fierceness of his wife, who had none of these counteracting principles, had not shamed and hardened him to the deed.

The poet's delineation of Richard III. gives a dreadful specimen of this indivisibility if I may so name it, of mental impulses. After his determination was fixed, his whole mind with the most perfect fidelity supported him in prosecuting it. Scarcely privileged from all interference of doubt that could linger, or humanity that could soften, or timidity that could shrink, he advanced with a grim concentrated constancy through scene after scene of atrocity, still fulfilling his vow to "cut his way through with a bloody axe." He did not waver while he pursued his object, nor relent when he seized it.

Cromwell (whom I mention as a parallel, not to Richard's depravity, but to his inflexible vigour) lost his mental consistency in the later end of a career, distinguished by as much decision as the world ever saw. It appears that the wish to be a king, at last arose in a mind which had executed royalty, and battled it from the land. As far as he really had any republican principles and partialities, the new desire must have been very inadequately opposed so far then, and must have produced a schism in the breast where all the strong forces of thought and passion had acted still then in concord. The new form of ambition became just predominant enough to carry him, by slow degrees, through the embarrassment and the shame of this incongruity into an irresolute determination to assume the crown; so irresolute, that he was reduced again to a mortifying indecision by the remonstrances of some of his friends, which he have adopted, and by his own apprehension of the public disapprobation, which he could have braved, if some of the principles of his own mind had not shrunk or revolted from the design. When, at last, the motives for relinquishing this design prevailed, it was by so small a degree of preponderance, that his reluctant refusal of the offered crown was the voice only of half his soul.

Not only two distinct counteracting passions, but one passion intent upon two objects, both equally desireable, but of which the one must be sacrificed, may annihilate in that instance the possibility of determined conduct. I recollect reading in an old divine, a story from an older historian applicable to this remark. A father went to the agents of a tyrant, to endeavor to redeem his two sons, military men, who with some other captives of war were condemned to die. He offered as a ransom, to surrender his own life and a large sum of money. The tyrant's agents, who had them in charge, informed him that his equivalent would be accepted for one of his sons, and only one, because they should be accountable for the execution of two persons; he might therefore choose which he would redeem. Anxious to save even one of them thus at the expense of his own life, he yet was unable to decide which should die, by choosing the other to live, and remained in the agony of this dilemma so long that they were both irreversably remanded for execution.

Wonderful Discovery.—A late Paris paper gives the following interesting narrative of a very singular and important discovery made recently by a Parisian gentleman, with the aid of a telescope, from the heights of Montmatre:

As a gentleman was taking a rural walk from the quarter of the Nouvelles Athens, where he resided, up to the heights of Montmatre, he was seized with a fancy to peep through the telescope of a populous observatory which is established on the summit. Observing some one of the windows of the building open, he requested permission to look through the instrument, which was readily granted. After he had satisfied his curiosity, he was about to withdraw, when the attendant requested him to look at the moon. He complied, and was astonished at the discovery he made. He saw distinctly, and with perfect accuracy, a number of animals. After a minute survey of the surrounding landscape, the amateur was induced to direct his telescope on his own houses near the foot of the hill, when, through the open window of the second floor, he distinctly observed an individual opening the drawers of his secretary, and with all convenient expedition appropriating their contents. The astounded observer had sufficient presence of mind to call some passers-by as witnesses of the robbery, and each of them after a peep through the telescope, gave his name and address in writing, and declared his readiness to appear as an evidence of the theft. After the declarations to the authorities, the robber was arrested, and, as the stolen goods were found in his possession, he was fully committed for trial.

A Dilemma.—Three boys went out a-fishing one day, when, a thunder storm coming up, they ran to a large hemlock tree a few rods from the brook, for shelter. Just before they reached the tree, it was shivered into a thousand pieces by a stroke of lightning. The boys stopped aghast; at last, one said to the nearest, "Sam, can you pray?"—"No."—"Bill, can you?"—"No."—"Nor I, either; but by Hukey, something must be done!"

Legal Eloquence.—A young backwoods lawyer lately concluded his argument in the following sublime burst:—"If, gentlemen of the jury, the defendant's hogs are permitted to roam at large over the fair fields of my client, with impunity and without pokes—then—yes, then, indeed, have our forefathers fought, and bled, and died, in vain!"

Putnam and the British Officer.—It is well known that in the time of the old French war much jealousy existed between the British and Provincial officers. A British major, deeming himself insulted by General (then captain) Putnam, sent him a challenge. Putnam, instead of giving a direct answer, requested the pleasure of a personal interview with the Major. He came to Putnam's tent, and found him seated on a small keg, quietly smoking his pipe. He demanded what communication, if any, Putnam had to make. "Why, you know," said Putnam, "I am but a poor miserable Yankee, that never fired a pistol in my life, and you must have an undue advantage over me. Here are two powder kegs; I have bored a hole and inserted a slow match in each; so if you will but be so good as to seat yourself here, I will light the matches, and he who does rise to sit the longest without squirming, shall be called the bravest fellow." The test was full of officers and men, who were hugely tickled at this strange device of the 'old wolf,' and compelled the major by their laughter and exhortations to sit. The signal was given, and the matches lighted. Putnam continued smoking as he inoffensively without watching at all their progressive diminution; but the British officer, though a brave fellow, could not help casting longing, lingering looks downwards, and his terrors increased as the length of his match diminished. The spectators withdrew one by one to get out of the reach of the expected explosion. At length, when the fire was within an inch of the keg, the major, unable to endure longer, jumped up, and, drawing out his match, cried, "Putnam, this is wilful murder! draw out your match—I yield!" "Why, my fellow," cried Putnam, "don't be in such a hurry, they're nothing but kegs of Onions." The sequel was among the missing, having sneaked off.

Rice.—The Rice trade has not yet received the attention it deserves. As a food, it is used extensively used in the United States, especially in large cities, where it is found well calculated to preserve children from affections of the bowels; and being pure farina, it does not sour upon the stomach. Rice is a substitute both for vegetables and bread, and millions use it thus.

The East Indians make a layer of rice and one of fecula, and call it pilau. The same dish is extensively used at the South by boiling the rice in the water where bacon and fowls have been boiled, and serving up the whole together. It is a mistake that rice cannot make bread. It is true that rice is pure farina, and bread is usually made of wheat which contains a portion of gluten, which, by yeast, is fermented, and thus throws out carbonic acid gas, which forms air cells, and raises the dough. Mastication reduces the mass, and it passes into the stomach a-lid, and mixes with saliva. Rice is extensively used in the form of bread in France and England; and more one of the bakers who furnish the people of New York with the best family bread, use a third of rice flour, the gluten of the other two-thirds serving to raise the whole, while the rice imparts the peculiar sweetness of that grain. At the highest retail prices it is cheaper than any other food, and there is no waste.

How shall we reason with Drunkards.—An answer to this question is suggested by the following statement, which is extracted from the report of a missionary of the Bound brook Auxiliary presented at the last public meeting of the Board.

"It was a few weeks since, that my steps were providentially directed to the abode of a drunkard. He was a mechanic, well able, by industry, to provide competent support for his increasing wife and four small children; yet squandering around here the marks of abject poverty. My call was unexpected, for the man was at home, and at work. Entering into conversation with him, I learned that he was a native of Ireland, and the distress of individuals and families, and mused intemperance as a prominent cause. He at once became his own accuser, and said that intemperance was his besetting sin. I then asked him, whose much do you spend daily on an average for ardent spirits? Will it average 3 cents?" "Yes." Will it average 6 cents?" "yes" "Will it average 9 cents?" "I think it will." "Well then, I to consider how much this will amount to in a week—in a month—in a year." The calculations were accurately made: and the manner was surprised when he found how many dollars he did have wasting—we so than throwing away. While his wife and children were destitute of necessary food and clothing. He immediately resolved to abandon the cups, apply himself diligently to his business, and, if possible, again taste the sweets of domestic happiness.

Weeks have now elapsed; and I am now informed that, although earnestly solicited by vicious companions, he has not tasted a drop of spirituous since that interview. The condemnation of his wife is now lighted with joy, and she bless es the hand of Providence, that directed me to her humble dwelling.

This is certainly the best way of proceeding with a drunkard. There are times when he is sober: find him then: for if drunk, he will pay no attention to you. Do not reproach him; but by well directed general remarks, afford him an opportunity for reproaching himself. Then before you call his attention to weighty principles, which he is prepared to dispute, or solemn realities which he will not investigate, show him, that as really as two and two make four, three cents per day amount to $10 95 per annum—six cents per day, $21 90—nine cents, to $32 85 and twelve cents, to $43 80, per annum. It re is nothing mysterious, nothing question able; and a man whose slavery to Satan is so abject, that he would oppose every religious overture, merely on account of its holy tendency, will be constrained to see that the money he has paid for liquor amounts to no trifling sum, and would when added to the wages he might have earned while spending it, be sufficient to handsomely clothe himself wife, and children, provide comfortable furniture, and surround his family with comforts. —N. Y. Evangelist.

Examination of a Mound.—Mr. M. Z. Kreider, of Lancaster Ohio, at a recent meeting of the Fairfield county Medical Society, made an interesting statement relative to the contents of a mound in the neighborhood of his residence. We find Dr. Kreider thus reported in the Ohio Eagle.

The mound is situated nine miles south-east of Lancaster, in the township of Rushcreek, is 150 feet in circumference, and probably was originally 15 feet high. It was opened by my direction on the 15th July last, and the following discoveries were made. On a level with a surrounding surface, there was found a regularly built furnace of rough stone, 18 feet in length, 6 feet wide, and 18 inches high, having a stone which showed that it had been properly shaped with some instrument, in the centre. On this furnace, a vessel of the same length and breadth, and two feet deep was placed. This vessel was about half an inch in thickness and composed of clay and pounded shells, burnt like potters ware, and was perfectly smooth within and without. The vessel contained 12 human skeletons, of various sizes, from that of children of three years to adult age—the adult bones being much thicker than those of our race. Around the outside of the child's vessel was found 32 beads of muscle shells, a piece of cane, sundry entire muscle shells—arrow and a curiously wrought stone. Under the vessel there was about one foot in depth of wood ashes and charcoal. The bottom of the vessel, by the exposure to heat, very nearly resembled common pot metal. The bones, beads and shells soon crumbled into dust after being exposed to the air—and the vessel likewise soon fell to pieces.

The Ohio Journal remarks that Dr. Kreider presumes that "these works of art were made by the sons or descendants of Cain," and that "they were reared before the deluge," he considers as "beyond doubt."

MISSOURI IRON MOUNTAINS.

Report of Prof. Shephard, of Yale College, and of the Medical College of the State of South Carolina.

Having visited the Iron mountains of Missouri in October last, I am happy to add my test mony to that of numerous observers by whom I have been preceded, respecting these remarkable deposites of iron ore. I am more strongly disposed to this by, both from the surprise with which I was struck on finding such vast accumulations of mineral wealth lying wholly unproductive in the heart of a country the richest by nature in the world, and from the regret I feel that any unnecessary impediments should delay an enterprise which we can scarcely fail of affording an affluent remboursement to all concerned, and at the same time of greatly promoting the prosperity of the West.

We have then in this extraordinary region, in the first place, hills many feet high, composed entirely of a compact, cherry red kidney ar. vegetite? with veins of black ox de of iron; in the 2d place the pilot Knob a mountain made up in large proportion of specular iron the fold spar often scarcely exceeding the ore with which it is mixed; and lastly the Iron Mountain, in which the whole mass is so nearly pure ore, that the observer is forced to search with the closest scrutiny to detect in it even a few solitary crystals of felspar!

In offering a statement respecting the extent and the richness of the ore, I hesitate not to say that it surpasses, for quantity and quality, every thing before known in the metallic history of our country. The Pilot Knob, as I have already said, is a peak of about 600ft in height, and one entire rock of iron porphyry—the granular porcelain imbedding the ore present, not only as forming the base of the porphyry but even constituting with crystal of surface in a state of almost absolute purity. In the iron mountain however, we find it most of this ore unmixed with any foreign matter whatever, with the exception only of the rare crystals of felspar mentioned above. In re-

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, December 4, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. Thomas Jefferson.

The President of the United States has issued a Proclamation under date of November 21st, in relation to the necessity of our citizens preserving our neutrality, in respect to the Canada rebellion. The National Intelligencer says of it:

The reader will find in our columns today a Proclamation by the President of the United States denouncing the criminal enterprises set on foot within our borders against the peace of the British Canadian provinces, and against the friendly property of their inhabitants. This Proclamation speaks to the patriotic feeling, the common sense, and the humanity of the President's fellow citizens, in a language such as befits the occasion and becomes the chief magistrate of a great and just People. The absolute decline to our own recently uttered opinions on the subject, if we did not express our hearty approbation of the Proclamation, as well on account of its probable influence at home, as of the effect it will certainly have to vindicate the character of our country abroad, and relieve it from suspicion of the baseness of encouraging or conniving at the iniquitous projects hatched by bad men on our Northern border. We say iniquitous, because it now appears that the invasion from Ogdensburg had not even the excuse of a sympathy with a people struggling to free themselves from an odious rule. The Canadian people, it seems, are, excepted, it seems, desired nothing better than to be let alone; and, so far from joining their invaders, are themselves in arms to repel these patriots of a new order, who evince their patriotism by violating at the same time the positive laws of their own country, and pirating upon the territory of their neighbors.

After the Proclamation, we hope at least that we shall hear no more of officers of the Government of the United States, uniting with fugitives from justice and the disciples of Fanny Wright to raise, in the United States, the bloody standard of war and desolation against a nation with whom we are enjoying the relations of peace and amity. If the Proclamation were to have no other effect than to put an end to this, the public approbation is due to the President for issuing it.

College of New Jersey.—We learn with pleasure, by the Princeton Whig, that this institution in that place, is now in an extremely flourishing condition. The Academic year commenced on Nov. 8th, at which time 80 new students entered—being a greater number than ever entered before at one time.

The new steam boat law, passed by Congress last winter, has encountered much opposition through the whole west, which only proved the goodness and necessity of the Law. The greatest objection to it by the steam-boat owners, was the order to use iron rods for tiller ropes. This objection, we are happy to discover, is now entirely obviated by an invention just patented, by Isaac McCord, of Cincinnati. The invention is a chain or cord formed of fine iron wire. The cord contains 150 strands of fine iron wire twisted together, about as strong and flexible, as a quarter of an inch in di meter, and lighter than the rope commonly used for that purpose. The steam boat captains and passengers highly approve of the invention.

Mr. Mahan's trial has been decided. It will be recollected that he was a colored Methodist preacher, who was delivered up by the Governor of Ohio to the requisition of the Governor of Kentucky, to be tried in the latter state, on a charge of abducting slaves. Able counsel was employed on both sides. The jury, after a few minutes absence, returned into court with the verdict, "Not Guilty."

Whig Celebration.

Agreeably to previous notice, the whigs of Westfield and vicinity assembled at Scotch Plains on Tuesday evening last, Nov. 27th, to celebrate the recent triumphs of the whigs in New York and other states. An excellent entertainment, in the best style, was prepared by Mr. Thomas J. Barr. John Wilson, Esq. was chosen president.

From the many toasts given, we select the following:

The "Independent Treasury Bill."—Too independent of the people for freemen to relish.

Ogden Hoffman, of N. Y.—Though silent, pledged to protect the Merchant and, in particular, Virginia, he will still continue faithful to the North.

By the president.—The Essex delegation, and their Whig associates in the Jersey Legislature.—True soldiers in the whig service—may they continue their assault on the strong holds of corruption till they are broken down, though defended by a Brazen Wall.

David A. Hays, Esq. of Newark, then addressed the meeting in a forcible and pertinent manner. After he had sat down, J. Wilson, Esq. added a few remarks as to the present prosperous state of the whig party.

By Alexander Wilcox.—The present democratic administration.—The people have taken it to the woodpile and left it nothing to do but to take care of it.

By Noah Brake.—Henry Clay.—A patriot and statesman may be elevated to the Presidential chair.

By Jetthro M. Vermule.—Our guest. Noah Drake, of Somerset—The Irodicus will never find him a lame duck.

By Silas Cole.—The whigs of our Country.—May they not fall into a lethargy, but be up and doing.

By Joseph M Osborn.—Senator Wall.—Signal and by bullying at the polls, and betting on the election—a humiliating spectacle" indeed!

By Allen Wilson.—The Governor of the state of New Jersey.—Honest, faithful and capable. He is too firmly seated in the affections of the people, to be successfully assailed by the violence of infuriated party spirit.

By Vincent Hardelew.—May our land be as free from Jackson men, as Ireland is from snakes and toads.

Michigan.—Returns have been received from nearly all the counties in the State. The Administration parity will be from 500 to 700. In the State Senate, so far as heard from, the administration have 12, to 5 whigs; and in the House 32 to 29 whigs. This state sends only 1 member to Congress.

☞ A million of dollars has been collected in Pennsylvania since last November, as toll for merchandise that has passed between Philadelphia and Pittsburg. This is a large receipt of tolls for one year, and more especially so, as it has been a year of unexampled depression of business of all kinds.

☞ Congress met yesterday, Monday, the 3d inst. at Washington. The President's message, which is anxiously looked for, will probably be delivered to the two houses to day at 12 o'clock. We hope to receive it in time to give a part of it to our readers next week.

The Northeastern Boundary.—We learn from Bangor, in Maine by way of Boston, that the Commissioners and Engineer appointed by Gov. Kent, to explore the disputed territory, and, if possible, to ascertain the true boundary line between Maine and New Brunswick, or, in other words our Northeastern Boundary, arrived at the former place on Monday last, and that their efforts have been crowned with complete success.

The great problem to be solved was, to ascertain the exact location of the "highland" between the waters emptying on the one side into the S. Lawrence, and on the other into the Atlantic Ocean. The British diplomatists have denied that there were any such highland in the contemplated regions. It is stated that the Commissioners have not only ascertained that there are such highlands, but that they rise in some places into mountains: and that they have discovered, discovered the boundary line itself, as marked out by the commissioners under the treaty of 1783, and all the monuments established at that time to fix the line.

This information, if as is supposed by the Executive, it will lead to the settlement at once of the controversy between the U. States and Great Britain on this subject, is not less welcome than important.—National I.I.

Heavy Damages.—The Circuit Court of the United States closed its November term at Providence R. I, on Thursday last. Among the decisions of the Court, we notice the following:—

In the case Hannah Littlefield vs. Babbitt & Dimond, of Bristol. The defendants in constructing a reservoir at their works in Bristol, left the pit open during the night, and the plaintiff fell in and was severely injured, and brought her action for damages. The jury, after being out some time, sent to the Court, asking information whether they could return a verdict giving the plaintiff a certain sum yearly during the term of her natural life. The court instructed them that such a verdict would be against law. The jury afterwards brought in a verdict of $3,625 damages for the plaintiff.

Another case in the present session of the Supreme Court at Bangor Maine, a suit was brought by Caleb Titus against the inhabitants of the town of Frankfort, for damages in consequence of a defect in the highway of that town. It appears that a quantity of plaster was left in the road, at which his horse took fright, upset the wagon, and threw him violently out and injured him severely. The Jury returned a verdict of $1,800 damages.

The Richmond Whig gives out an intimation of a courteous correspondence between Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Biddle, and that the latter is not satisfied with Mr. Clay's plan of a bank.

The Orthodox Congregational Church in Sharon, Ct. was entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday morning of last week. The fire was occasioned, it is supposed, by a defect of the stove pipe, and occurred during the morning service, when the Congregation were assembled.

The Mississippi was filled with floating ice on the 19th, at St. Louis. At Galena the country was buried in snow—the tributary creeks all closed—and the thermometer 9 degrees above zero.

The Darien, Geo. Telegraph of Nov. 13th, says the frost will reduce the cotton crop one half. A severe storm had materially injured the plantations about Baton Rouge (Louisiana,) on the 17th.

Cotton Yarns manufactured at Lebanon, Tenn. by Messrs. Muirhead, Masterson & Co. are offered for sale at Nashville. These factories will do more for the south than conventions.

A vessel has been cleared at New York for Kamchatka.

From the Mississippian, we learn that the hon. Thomas H. Williams, of Pearl, (Adams county,) has been appointed by Governor McNutt, of Mississippi, U. S. Senator, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the hon. Isaiah F. Trotter.

The U. S. Steam Frigate, Fulton, on a trial of speed with the Great Western, on the occasion of the departure of the latter for Bristol, proved to be superior to her English competitor in the strife.

Frontier Movements.—Gen. Brady, of the U. S. Army, left Detroit on the 19th, with a steamboat to intercept one or two steamboats with provisions, which were expected from Cleveland, to make a descent upon Canada. It is again said the insurgents have large reserves. A company of 150 were skulking about Buffalo on the 22d, and a box of muskets, picks, &c., was detected there by the Deputy collector, when he was brutally assailed by them and the box rescued.

About the first of November a traveller in Scott county, Miss. was murdered by being shot in the back, and robbed of $10,630 in bank bills. The murderers escaped with their booty.

The Montreal and Maine papers, speak of the weather as being colder than was ever before at this season. Navigation was closed on Lake Erie and the great canal at Buffalo, on Monday of last week.

The Hudson river is closed as far down as Poughkeepsie.

Stoves, Cheaper than ever!

J. THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally, that they have now on hand a large assortment of stoves of the most approved patterns for burning coal or wood; and as they wish to close their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they were ever before offered in this market. Their assortment consists of Stanley's Rotary of all sizes, Pooley's, Church & Stanley's, James', and all sizes of the nine plate.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low; they consist chiefly of Pooley's, Church's, Lyon's, James', Haley's, Wilson's, Gillis' and Nine Plates; they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat; we shall only, that they are now made handsomer and better than ever; and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

ARREN GROUT
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English education. In the accomplishment of such design great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care is taken to excite a love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its aim is rather the prevention than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil. During the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

The sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire. This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the pupil who is not reformed by gentle, but firm, discipline, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its countenance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Orphan's Court.

Term of October, 1838.

John L. Heath, Administrator, &c. of Miron G. Olmsted, deceased. } Decree to limit Creditors.

ON application of the above named Administrator it is ordered by the Court, that said Administrator give Public Notice to the Creditors of the estate of said Deceased, to bring in their debts demands or claims against the same within one year from this day, Oct. 23, 1838 by setting up a copy of this order in five of most public places in the county of Essex for two months—and also by advertising the same in one of the newspapers printed in this state, which circulates most generally in the neighborhood where said deceased lived, for the same space of time; and if any Creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim, within the same period of one year public notice being given as aforesaid such Creditor shall be forever barred of his or her action therefore against the said Administrator.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume
OF THE
New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on wood, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Enchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the following numbers, besides Engravings on steel, rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New Volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices recently and shortly to be published—Reviews of new works—Scientific discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editor. The subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Mrs. Sigourney, Mrs. Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of twohundred others, well known to the reading community for the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick and elegance of its typography. It is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable a specimens for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, and read throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, genteel, and agreeable companion of the parlour, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, and for the delectation of the man of business. And all of both sexes purchasing it for taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would subvert a pleasantry known to be not only innocent but dangerous to the fair, will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every FRIDAY, at No. 1, Beekman-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished with two very large plates every month, with a splendid superb extra quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely engraved Vignette Title page and table of contents are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Sickness, Heartburn, Fever and Ague, Spasmodic Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful preventive in cleansing the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a number of years, the most superior I have acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you this from these few lines. I am respectfully yours, &c.

I passed, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I would advise them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and it records to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended—also especially for tapeworms which one of my family had been severely afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. I am, Sir, yours, &c. I shall use them in general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness as the generality always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the relief of headache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

Futurity.

The fairest scenes beneath the skies,
The rays of joy that brightest beam,
When wrapt in fancy's fond disguise
More bright and more enchanting seem.

Still to the soul how dull the past,
With future hours compared appears;
Still fancy wild, than time more fast,
Plans her gay map of future years.

To him who longs the bliss to prove
Which lurks in fancy's landscape wide,
How slow the hours and minutes move,
Like bubbles, down time's lazy tide!

How lovely, smiling from afar,
The future joys of life appear!
Alas, how tame, how flat they are,
When to their presence we draw near.

There is an hour—an hour to come,
Which baffles fancy's boldest flight;
She dare not pierce death's awful gloom,
She cannot gaze on heavenly light.

Not all her fairy powers can paint
The joys that dwell above the sky,
For every eye but faith's grows faint,
When stretched towards eternity!

From the Knickerbocker.

Sayings of Dias.

What is the greatest good? a mind which can
Look in itself, and find its purpose pure;
What the worst pest to man? his brother man,
Whose pride delights to make his kind endure;
Who's rich? who nothing wants; who's poor?
The anxious wretch who's always wanting more;
What's the best marriage dower? A modest life.
Becoming both to maiden and to wife;
Who's virtuously chaste? she of whose fame
Report speaks true to lie, in dread of its shame;
What marks the upright man? To do no wrong,
When power, occasion, pretext, all are strong;
What notes the fool? To wish, with mind unstable,
To do a wrong, yet find himself unable.

Political Anecdote.—The New Era tells the following anecdote, which is worthy of notice at this time:—A rich man who was building some brick houses in Boston at the time when the Hon. Mr. Gore and Elbridge Gerry were candidates for the governorship of Massachusetts, walked down to his new buildings on election day, and found the hood carpenter putting up his tools. On asking where he was going he said, "To the polls, Sir." "To the polls, are you—and who do you vote for?" The carpenter answered, by asking the same question. "I shall vote for the hon. Mr. Gore," said the owner, "and you must too."

"No, sir," replied the carpenter, "I shall vote for Elbridge Gerry."

"Well, sir," said the owner, "if you vote for Mr. Gerry, you shall do no more work for me."

"Well, sir," said the carpenter, bracing himself up, "if you vote for the honorable Mr. Gore, I will never work for you again as long as I live!"

A Friendly Intimation.—The boarders of a tavern in Georgia were annoyed by flies in their butter. Judge Dooly took the the tavern-keeper aside, and remarked to him in a private way, that some of his friends thought it would be best for him to put the butter on one plate and the flies on another, and let the people mix them to suit themselves. He merely suggested it for consideration.

A Paddy's Idea of Travelling.—Surely, said Pat, the Yankees are great travellers—they travel 60 or 70 miles a day, while I have hard work to travel 25 or 30 miles; but there's not so great a difference after all, for they don't more than half travel the ground over, while I travel both sides of the road for the most part.

A short time since, as a well known English master in a grammar school was censuring his pupil for the dullness of his comprehension, and consenting to instruct him in a sum of Practice—he said, "Is not the price of a penny loaf always a penny?"—when the boy innocently answered,—"No, sir, the bakers sell them two for three half pence when they are stale."—Stale wit is not always as good as this.

A doctor, on calling upon a gentleman who had been some ailing, put a fee into the patient's hands, and took the medicine himself which he had prepared for the sick man; he was not made sensible of his error till he found himself getting ill, and the patient getting better.

The Eye.—A person may disciplise the muscles of the face, and he may control the voice; but there is something in the eye beyond the will; and we frequently find it giving the lie to the lie.

Promote temperance, as much as you can.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Masonic Hall and Tammany Hall, or a ride in an Omnibus.—On Saturday evening, about dusk, and near the time of closing the police office, a bustle and noise were heard in the corridor leading to the police office, increasing as it came nearer, until two men, each collaring the other, presented themselves before the presiding justice, Mr. Lowndes, and demanded redress. Before describing the scene that followed this exhibition it may be well to introduce the parties to the reader. One was a conductor of a Broadway omnibus, the other a mechanic, and an English radical.

The Radical—Now then make your ackerzation, get me kermitted, that'll be funny.

The Conductor—I don't think it will be very funny if you have behaved like a scamp.

The Radical—Make yer ackerzation, come to the pint in kestion.

The conductor, addressing the Justice—This man got into my omnibus on the corner of Wall and Broadway. He was half drunk, had evidently been drinking nasty gin.

The radical—Don't say any thing unrespectful of gin; it has more spirit than either on us.

Justice Lowndes to the conductor—Continue your charge.

Conductor—When he got in the omnibus he said put me down at the hall.

Radical to the Justice—The a l, feckerleck that—that's the pint atween us.

Conductor—Well, we stopped at the first hall on our route, which was Masonic Hall. I woke this man up and he got out and paid me without saying any thing. Four persons then got in and the omnibus was now full. Just as I had pulled the string for the driver to go on, this man runs up and cal s to me, Stop a minute, let me get in." Upon which I told him if he got in he would have to pay again. "I shan't do any such thing," said he. "It's the rule of the omnibus," said I. "I rang your rule," said he. During all this time the omnibus was going on, and this conversation took place on the foot board, where we were both standing. After the last expression, he gave me a push, and attempted to make his way into the omnibus. As all the seats were taken, and the passengers didn't wish him upon their knees, they pushed him out again on me, and we both fell off the bass into the road.

The Radical—Now it's my go. I stands upon my rights. I wanted her to go to Tammany all, and this feller pute me down at Masonic all; that's why I wanted fer to git in again, which I c'tened I'd a right for.

Justice Lowndes—Why did you alight without first seeing where you were?

Radical—Why ye see, ses he, "ere yer are," so I got out, not before I could dskiver the horror, the homnibus was horf.

Justice Lowndes—You were drunk.

Radical—A feetle, skeesilee, that's half.

The Conductor—Full as a sponge, and stunk enough to make a horse sick. Well, as soon as I could get up, I ran and overtook the omnibus. I had hardly done so, when I received a blow in the back from a stone. I turned round, and saw this fellow pitting stones at the buss, one of which went me the head and took a lump on the arm. I then got down and took him into custody.

Justice Lowndes advised the parties to retire and try to make an arrangement, which advice they followed. The radical paid the conductor a dollar, with a remark, that fer foster he'd hom-nibus it in his shoes.—New York Times.

Great Results hang on Little Things.—Two men were at work one day in a ship yard. They were hewing a stick of timber, to put into a ship. It was a small stick and not worth much. As they cut off chips, they found a worm, a little worm, about half an inch long.

"This stick is wormy," said one, "shall we put it in?"

"I do not know; yes, I think it may go in.—It will not be seen, of course."

"Yes, but there may be other worms in it; and these may increase and injure the ship."

"No, I think not. To be sure it is not worth much; yet I do not wish to lose it. But come, never mind the worm; we have seen but one; put it in."

The stick was accordingly put in. The ship was finished, and as she was launched off into the waters, all ready for the seas, she looked beautiful as a swan when the breeze ruffle his white feathered bosom, as he sits on the waters. She went to sea, and for a number of years did well. But it was found on a distant voyage, that she grew weak and rotten. Her timbers were found all eaten away by the worms. But the captain thought he would try to get her home. He had a costly load of goods in the ship, such as silks, crapes, and the like, and a great many people. On the way home a storm gathered. The ship for a while climbed up the high waves, and then plunged down, creaking and rolling heavily. But see her spring a leak. They tried two pumps, and they worked at them day and night, but the water came in faster and faster. She filled with water, and she went down under the dark blue waters of the ocean, with all the goods and all the people on board. Ev'ry one perished. Oh, how many wives, and mothers, and children mourned over husbands, and sons, and brothers, for whose return they were waiting, but they never returned! And all this great calamity, see, one that little stick of timber, was built! How much property, and how many lives they be destroyed by a little worm! And how much evil may a man do, when he does a small evil, as that man did when he put the wormy timber in the ship.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

It were absurd to suppose that any human being can attain a state of mind capable of acting in all instances invariably with the full power of determination; but it is obvious that many have possessed a habitual and a very commanding measure of it; and I am persuaded that the preceding remarks have taken account of its chief characteristics and constituent principles. A number of additional observations remain

The slightest view of human affairs shews what fatal and ample mischief may be caused by men of this character when misled or wicked. You have but to recollect the conquerors, despots, bigots, unjust conspirators, and signal villians of every class, who have blasted society by the relentless vigor which could act consistently and heroically wrong. Till, therefore the virtue of mankind be greater, there is reason to be pleased that so few of them are endowed with extraordinary decision.

When this character is dignified by wisdom and principle, great care is yet required in the possessor of it to prevent it from becoming unamiable. As it involves much practical assertion of superiority over other human beings, the mind, not taught to be as mild and conciliating as possible: the pride will feel provoked, affection hurt and weakness oppressed. But this is not the manner which the man whom I am considering, will be naturally most inclined to wear. Rather, he he will have a manner of sternness, reserve, and incompliance. He will have the appearance of keeping himself always at a distance from social equality; and his friends will feel as if their friendship were continually sliding into subserviency, while his intimate connexions will think he does not attach the due importance either to their opinions or to their regard. His manner, when they differ from him, or complain, will be in danger of giving the impression of careless inattention, and sometimes of disdain.

When he can accomplish a design in his own person alone, he may separate himself to the work in which he is engaged, and, inclosed individually, which takes little account of good wishes and kind concern, any more than it cares for opposition, which seeks neither aid nor sympathy, and which seems to say I do not want any of you and I am glad that I do not; leave me alone to succeed or die. This has a very repellent effect on the friends who wished to feel themselves of some importance, in some way or other, to a person whom they are constrained to respect. When associates are to join him in his undertakings, his mode of signifying it will often rather be to command the co-operation than to invite it.

In consultation his manner will indicate that when he is equally with the rest in possession of the circumstances of the case, he does not at all expect to bear any opinions that shall correct his own, but is satisfied that either his own conception of the subject is the just one, or that his own mind must originate that which shall be so. The striking difference will then be apparent between him and his associates, that their manner of receiving his opinions is that of agreement or dissent; his manner of receiving theirs is that of sanction or rejection. He has the tone of authoratively deciding on what they say, but never of submitting to decision what himself says. Their coincidence with his views does not give him a firmer assurance of his being right, nor their dissent any other impression than that of their incapacity to judge. If his feeling took the indistinct form of a reflection, it would be, Mine is the business of comprehending and devising, and I am here to rule this company, and not to consult them; I want their docility and not their arguments; I come not to seek their co-operation in thinking, but to induce their concurrence in executing what is already thought for them. Of course, many suggestions and reasons which appear important to those from whom they come, will be disposed of by him with unmoved attention, or a light facility, that will seem very decisive to persons who possibly hesitate to admit the full persuasion that he is a demi-God, and that they are but insects. Lord Chatham, in going out of the house of Commons, just as one of the speakers against him concluded his speech by emphatically urging what he perhaps rightly thought the unanswerable question, "Where can we find reasons to support such a war?" turned round a moment and replied, "gentle shepherd, tell me where."

Even the assenting convictions, and practical compliances, yielded by degrees to this decisive man, may be somewhat undervalued; as they will appear to him no more than simply coming, and that perhaps very slowly to a right appreciation: whereas himself understood and decided justly from the first, and had been right all this while.

He will be in danger of extending but little tolerance to the prejudices, hesitation, and timidity, of those with whom he has to act. He will say to himself, I wish theirs were any thing like manhood among the beings called men; and that they could have the sense and spirit not to let themselves be hampered by so many silly notions and childish fears. Why cannot they either or their movements proceed with some prompt itude and vigor, or let me, that can, do it for them? Am I to wait till debility becomes strong, and folly wise? If full scope be allowed to these propensities, they will make even a man of elevated virtue a tyrant, who in the consciousness of the right intention and the assurance of the wise contrivance, of his designs, will hold himself justified in being regardless of every thing but the accomplishment of them. He will forget all respect for the feelings and liberties of beings who are to be regarded as but a subordinate machinery to be actuated, or to be thrown aside when not actuated, by the spring of his commanding spirit.

I have before asserted that this strong character may be exhibited with a sufficiency of manner, and that it will thus best secure its efficacy. But this mildness must often be at the cost of great effort: and how much considerate policy or benevolent forbearance it will require, for a man to exert his utmost vigor in the very task, as it will appear to him at the time of cramping that vigor! Lycurgus appears to have been a high example of such patience in the firm prosecution of designs which were to be effected among a perverse multitude.

Lord Brougham concludes, in the last Edinburgh Review, his masterly sketches of public characters in the reigns of the two last Georges, with the following magnificent portrait of

WASHINGTON:

How grateful the relief which the friend of mankind, the lover of virtue, experiences, when turning from the contemplation of such a character, his eye rests upon the greatest man of our own or of any age,—the only one upon whom an epithet so thoughtlessly lavished by men to foster the crimes of their worst enemies, may indeed be justly and innocently bestowed! In Washington we truly behold a marvellous contrast to almost every one of the endowments and the vices which we have been contemplating, and which are so well fitted to excite a mingled admiration, sorrow, and abhorrence. With none of that brilliant genius which dazzles ordinary minds; with not even any remarkable quickness of apprehension; with knowledge less than almost all persons in the middle ranks, and many well educated of the humbler classes possess; this eminent person is prescribed to our observation clothed in attributes so modest, so unpretending, as little calculated to strike or astonish, as if he had passed unknown through some secluded region of private life. But he had a judgement sure and sound: a steadiness of mind which never suffered any passion, or even any feeling, to ruffle its calm; a strength of understanding which worked rather than forced its way through all obstacles,—removing or avoiding rather than overleaping them. His courage whether in battle or in council, was as perfect as might be expected from this pure and steady temper of soul. A perfectly just man, with a thoroughly firm resolution never to be misled by others, any more than by others overawed; never to be seduced or betrayed, or hurried away by his own weakness or self delusion, any more than by other men's arts; nor ever to be disheartened by the most complicated difficulties, any more than to be spoiled on the daily heights of fortune—such was this great man, whether we regard him sustaining alone the whole weight of campaigns all but desperate, or gloriously terminating a just warfare by his resources and his courage—presiding over the jarring elements of political council, alike deaf to the storms of all extremes—or directing the formation of a new Government for a great people, the first time that so vast an experiment had ever been tried by means wholly free from every disturbing influence. Finally retiring from the supreme power to which his virtue had raised him over the nation he had created, and whose destinies he had guided as long as his aid was required, retiring from the veneration of all parties, of all nations, of all mankind, in order that the rights of men might be conserved, and that his example might never be appealed to by vulgar tyrants. This is the consummate glory of the great American; a triumphant warrior where the most sanguine had a right to despair: a successful ruler in all the difficulties of a course wholly untried; but a warrior, who never wore out its sheath, only when the first law of our nature commanded it to be drawn; and a ruler who, having tasted of supreme power, gently and unostentatiously desired that the cup might pass from him, nor would suffer more to wet his lips than the most solemn and sacred duty to his God and his country required.

To his latest breath did this great patriot maintain the noble character of a supporter the parties of peace, and a statesman the friend of justice. Dying, he bequeathed to his heirs the sword he had worn in the war of liberty, charging them "never to take it from the scabbard but in selfdefence, or in defence of their country and her freedom; and commanding them, that when it should thus be drawn, they should never sheathe it before every give it up, but prefer falling with it in their hands to the relinquishment thereof." Never was the majesty and simple eloquence of which are not surpassed in the oratory of Athens and Rome. It will be the duty of the historian and sage in all ages to omit no occasion of commemorating this illustrious man; and until time shall be no more, will a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and virtue, be derived from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington!

☞ It is stated in the Lexington (Kentucky) Observer that after the acquittal of Adams, on the criminal charge of kidnapping, an action to recover the value of the negroes stolen, was brought by Mr. Grantham against Adams, who failing in giving the required bail, was duly placed in prison.

MESSAGE,

Of the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, Dec. 4th, 1838.

Fellow Citizens of the Senate, and House of Representatives :

I congratulate you on the favorable circumstances in the condition of our country, under which you reassemble for the performance of your official duties. Although the anticipations of an abundant harvest have not every where been realized, you on the whole the labors of the husbandmen are rewarded with a bountiful return : industry prospers in its various branches of business and enterprise ; general health again prevails through our vast diversity of climate ; nothing threatens, from abroad, the continuance of external peace ; nor has anything at home impaired the strength of those domestic ties which constitute the only guaranty to the permanency of our happy Union, and which, formed in the hour of peril, has hitherto been abundantly sustained through every vicissitude in our national affairs. These blessings which evince the care and beneficence of Providence, call for devout and fervent gratitude.

We have not less reason to be grateful for other bounties bestowed by the same munificent hand, and more exclusively our own

The present year closes the first half century of our federal institutions ; and our system—differing from all others in the acknowledged, practical, and unlimited operation which it has for so long a period given to the sovereignty of the people—has now been fully tested by experience.

The constitution devised by our forefaths as the frame work of that system, then untried, has become a settled form of government ; preserving the great principles upon which it was founded, and wonderfully promoting individual happiness and private interests. Though subject to change, yet such is the wisdom of its construction, and so stable has been the public sentiment, that it remains unaltered. It has proved amply sufficient for the various emergencies incident to our condition as a nation. A formidable foreign war ; agitating divisions between domestic sovereignties ; temptations to interfere in the intestine commotions of neighboring countries ; the dangerous influences that arise in periods of excessive prosperity : and the anti-republican tendencies of associated wealth—these with other trials not less formidable, have all been encountered, and thus far successfully resisted.

It is now ours for the first time in our Union to test the advantages of a government entirely dependent on the continual exercise of the popular will ; and our experience has shown that it is as beneficial in practice as it is just in theory. Each successive change made in our local institutions has extended the right of suffrage, has increased the influence of the mass of the community, and restricted more and more the powers of the government ; yet the intelligence, prudence and patriotism of the people have kept pace with this augmented responsibility. In no country has education been so widely diffused. Domestic peace has no where so largely reigned. The close bonds of social intercourse have in no instance prevailed with such harmony over a space so vast. All forms of religion have united for the first time, to diffuse charity and piety, because for the first time in the history of nations, all have been untrammeled and absolutely free.

The deepest recesses of the wilderness have been penetrated, and numerous communities have sprung up, unrivalled in prosperity, general intelligence, tranquility, and the wisdom of their political institutions. Internal improvement, the fruit of individual enterprise fostered by the states has added new links to the confederation, and rewards to industry. Doubtful questio n of policy have been settled by the common sense ; and agriculture, commerce and manufactures, minister to each other. Taxation and public debt, which bear so heavily on all other nations, have pressed with comparative lightness on us. Without entangling alliance, our friendship is prized by every nation ; and the rights of our citizens are every where respected, because they are known to be guarded by a united, sensitive, and watchful people.

To this peaceful operation of our institutions, so evident and successful, we owe that increased attachment to them which is among the most cheering exhibitions of popular sentiment ; and will prove their best security in time to come, against foreign and domestic assault.

This review of our institutions for half a century, without exciting a spirit of vain exultation, should serve to impress upon us, the great principles from which they are deriving constant and direct supervision by the people over every public measure ; strict forbearance on the part of the government from exercising any doubtful powers; and cautious abstinence from interference with concerns which properly belong, and are best left to state regulations and individual enterprise.

Full information of the state of our foreign affairs having been recently submitted to congress, I deem it necessary now to bring to your notice only such events as have occurred, or such as require particular attention.

The most amicable dispositions continue between us and all the nations with whom we have habitual intercourse. At the date of my last annual message, Mexico was the only nation that could not be included in so gratifying a reference to our foreign relations.

I am happy to be able now to inform you, that an adjustment has been made toward the acquittal of our differences with that republic. This important change has been effected by special diplomatic negotiations, that have resulted in a treaty, which will refer to the arbitrament of a friendly power, all the subjects of controversy. There is also reason to believe that an equitable settlement of all disputed points will be attained without further difficulty or unnecessary delay, and thus authorize the free resumption of diplomatic intercourse with our sister republic

While we have the most extensive boundary of the United States, no just cause of complaint exists between the Government and that of Great Britain has passed since that communicated to Congress towards the close of their last session. The offer to negotiate a convention for the appointment of a joint commission of survey and exploration, I am now, assured will be met by Her Majesty's Government in a conciliatory and friendly spirit, and instructions to enable the British minister here to conclude such an arrangement will be transmitted to him without needless delay. It is hoped and expected that these instructions will be of a liberal character, and that this negotiation, if successful, will prove to be an important step toward the satisfactory and final adjustment of the controversy.

I had hoped that the respect for the laws and regard for the peace and honor of their own country, which have ever characterized the citizens of the United States, would have prevented any portion of them from using any means to promote insurrection in the territory of a power with which we are at peace, and with which the United States are desirous of maintaining the most friendly relations. I regret deeply, however, to be obliged to inform you that the has not been the case. Information has been given to me derived from official and other source s, that many citizens of the United States have associated together to make hostile excursions from our territory into Canada, and to aid and abet insurrection there, in violation of the laws and obligations of the United States, and in open disregard of their own duties as citizens. This information has been in part confirmed by a hostile invasion actually made by citizens of the United States, in conjunction with Canadians and others and accompanied by a forcible seizure of the property of our citizens, and an application there of to the promotion of military operations against the authorities and people of Canada.

The results of these criminal assaults upon the peace and order of a neighboring country have been, as was to be expected, fatally destructive to the misguided or deluded persons engaged in them, and highly injurious to those in whose behalf they are professed to have been undertaken The authorities in Canada, from intelligence received of such intended movements among our citizens, have felt themselves obliged to take precautionary measures to prevent them ; and have embodied the militia, and assumed an attitude to repel the invasion to which they believed the colonies were exposed from the United States.

A state of feeling on both sides of the frontier has thus been produced, which called for prompt and vigor us interference. If an insurrection existed in Canada, the amicable dispositions of the United States toward Great Britain, as well as their duty to themselves, would lead them to maintain a strict neutrality, and to restrain their citizens from all violations of the laws which have been passed for its enforcement. But this Government recognizes a still higher obligation to repress all attempts on the part of its citizens to disturb the peace of a country where order prevails, or has been reestablished. Depredations by our citizens upon nations at peace with the United States, or combinations for committing them, at all times been regarded by the American Government in the light of the most atrocious character. Military incursions by our citizens into countries so situated, and the commission of acts of violence on the members thereof, in order to effect a change in its government or under any pretext whatever, have, from the commencement of our government been held equally criminal on the part of those engaged in them, and as much deserving of punishment as would be the like outrages of the public peace by the perpetration of similar acts within our own territory.

By no country or persons have these invaluable principles of internal law—principles the strict observance of which is so indispensable to the preservation of social order in the world—been more earnestly cherished or sacredly respected than by those great and good men who first declared and finally established the independence of our country. They prodigated and maintained them at an early and critical period in our history ; they were subsequently made to rest in Legislative enactments of a highly penal character, the faithful enforcement of which has hitherto been, and will I trust, always continue to be regarded as a duty inseparably associated with the maintainance of our national honor.—That the people of the U. S should feel an interest in the spread of political institutions as like as they regard their own, and that they cannot but cast a sincere solicitude for the success of all those who are, at any time, in good faith struggling for their acquisition, is imputed to our citizens as a crime.

With the entire freedom of opinion, and an undisguised expression thereof, on their part, the Government has neither the right, nor, I trust the disposition, to interfere. But whether the interest of the citizens of the U. S. in such struggles should be in the party to any such struggle, and by inevitable consequence, to the war which is waged in its support, is a question which, by our constitution, is wisely left to Congress alone to decide. It is by the laws, already made criminal in our citizens to embarrass or anticipate that decision, by unauthorized military operations on their part. Offences of this character, in addition to their criminality as violations of the laws of our country, have a direct tendency to draw upon our own citizens at large the multiplied evils of a foreign war, and expose to jurious imputations the good faith and honor of the country. As such they deserve to be put down with promptitude and decision I cannot be mistaken, I am confident, in counting on the cordial and general concurrence of my fellow citizens in this sentiment.

A copy of the proclamation which I have felt it my duty to issue, is herewith communicated. I cannot but hope that the good sense and patriotism, the regard for the honor and reputation of their country, the respect for the laws which they have themselves enacted for their own government and the love of order for which the mass of our people have been so long and so justly distinguished, will deter the comparatively few who are engaged in them from the further prosecution of such desperate enterprises, in the mean time, the existing laws have been, and will continue to be, faithfully executed ; and every effort will be made to carry them out to their full extent.—Whether they are sufficient or not, to meet the actual state of things on the Canadian frontier, it is for Congress to decide.

It will appear from the correspondence herewith submitted, that the Government of Russia declin ed a renewal of the fourth article o the convention of April, 1824, between the United states and his imperial majesty, by the article of which it is agreed that hereafter there shall not be formed by the subjects of the United States, or any of the subjects of his majesty on the northwest coast of America or any of the islands adjacent to the north of 54 40' of north latitude, and that in the same manner there shall be no establishment upon the said coast or islands by the subjects of his majesty, or under the authority of his government in any part of the north of 54 40' of north latitude, beyond the same parallel ; and that during a term of ten years, counting from the signature of the present convention, the ships of both powers, or which belong to their citizens or subjects respectively may reciprocally be used without any hindrance whatever, the interior seas gulfs harbors and creeks upon the coast mentioned in the preceding article, for the purpose of fishing and trading with the natives of the country."

The reason assigned for declining to renew the provisions of this article are briefly that the only use made by our citizens of the privilege it enforces them has been to supply the natives with spirituous liquors, ammunition, and fire arms ; and this traffic has been excluded from the Russian trade ; and as the supplies furnished from the U. States are injurious to the Russian establishments on the Northwest Coast, and calculated to produce complaints between the two governments, this Government thinks it for the interest of both countries not to accede to the proposition made by the American Govern ment for the renewal of the article last referred to

The correspondence herewith communicated will show the grounds upon which we opposed that the citizens of the U. States have, independent of the provisions of the convention of 1824, a right to trade with the n tives upon the coast, in question of unoccupied places, liable, however it is admitted at any time to be extinguished by the creation of Russian establishments at such points. This right is denied by the Russian government, which asserts that by the creation of the treaty of 1824, each party agreed to waive the general right to land on the vacant coast in the possessions of the other, and it titude was referred to, and accepted, in lieu thereof, the mutual privileges mentioned in the fourth article.—The capital and tonnage, employed by our citizens in their trade with the north west coast of America, will perhaps on adverting to the official statements of the commerce and navig tion of the United States for the last few years be deemed too inconsiderable in amount to attract much attention; yet the subj ect may, in other respects, deserve the careful consideration of Congress.

I regret to state the blockade of the principal ports on the eastern coast of Mexico, which in consequence of differences between that republic and France, was instituted in May last, unfortunately still continues, enforced by a competent French naval force, and is necessarily embarrassing to our own trade in the gulf, in common with that of other nations. Every disposition, however, has been evinced to exist in the part of the French Government, to render this measure as little onerous as practicable to the interests of the citizens of the United States, and to those of neutral commerce ; and it is to be hoped that an early settlement of the difficulties between France and Mexico, will soon reestablish the harmonious relations formerly subsisting between them, and again open the ports of that republic to the vessels of all friendly nations.

The negotiation for marking that part of the boundary between the U. S. and the republic of Texas, which extends from the mouth of the Sabine to the Red River, was concluded and signed at this city on the 25th of April last. It has now been ratified by both governments ; and seasonable measures will be taken to carry it into effect on the part of the U. States.

The application of the republic for admission into the Union, made in August 1837 and which gave rise to the mission of the minister who has since left us, has been formally withdrawn, as will appear from the accompanying copy of the note of the Minister Plenipotentiary of Texas, which was presented to the secretary of State on the occasion of the exchange of the ratifications of the convention above mentioned.

Copies of the convention with Texas, of a commercial treaty concluded with the King of Greece and of a similar treaty with the Peru Bolivian confederation, the ratifications of which have been recently exchanged, accompany this message for the information of Congress, and such legislative ar rangements as may be found necessary or expedient, in relation to either of them.

To watch over and foster the interests of a gradually increasing and widely extended commerce ; to guard the rights of American citizens whom business, pleasure or other motives may call into foreign countries, and at the same time, to cultivate those sentiments of mutual respect and good will which experience has proved so beneficial in international intercourse, the Government of the United States has deemed it expedient, from time to time, to establish diplomatic connexions with different foreign states, by the appointment of representatives to reside within their respective territories. I am gratified to be enabled to announce to you, that, since the close of your last session, diplomatic relations have been established under the happiest auspices with Austria and the two Sicilies ; that new appointments have been made in the respective missions of Russia, Brazil, Belgium, and Sweden, and Norway, in this country ; and that a minister extraordinary has been received, accredited to this Government from the Argentine Confederation.

An exposition of the fiscal affairs of the Government, and of their condition for the past year will be made to you by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The available balance in the Treasury, on the 1st of January next, is estimated at $2,780, 342. The receipt of the year, from customs and lands, will probably amount to $40,615,68.8. These usual sources of revenue have been increased by an issue of Treasury notes, of which less than eight millions of dollars, including interest and principal, will be outstanding at the end of the year, and by the sale of one of the banks of the United States for $2,280,871. The aggregate of means from these and other sources with the balance on hand on the 1st of January last; has been applied to the payment, of appropriations by Congress. The whole expenditure for the year on their account, including the redemption of more than eight millions of Treasury notes, constitutes an aggregate of about forty millions of dollars, and will still leave into the Treasury the balance before stated.

Large appropriations will be required for the public service, and for the gradual extinguishment of the public debt during the present year. Considerable sums will also be required to meet those appropriations which, though made at the last session of Congress, will not be expended within the year. The demands upon the Treasury for the service of the year, will probably exceed the receipts, and render necessary the use of a portion of the balance now in the Treasury. The precise amount to be thus applied, will depend upon the receipts during the year, which will be affected by the reduction of the duties on imports, which will take effect on the 1st of January next. The Secretary will present to you the measures which he deems necessary to meet the expenditures of the year, and to keep the revenue and expenditures commensurate with each other. The attention of Congress is respectfully invited to the propriety of making such provisions by law, as will secure the faithful application of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, to the objects designated by the constitution. The power of appropriation is subject to the exercise of a sound discretion by the Legislature, and it is to be presumed that the future will furnish no exception to the past, in the observance of this duty. The Secretary will present to you the views of the Department upon the currency, and upon the means of collecting the revenue. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, that the present organization of the Treasury Department be retained, with such modifications as time and experience have shown to be necessary. The results of the past year, however is likely to exist ; secure the public money, and promote the general convenience, will be submitted to you. Should any deficiency occur in the receipts of the year, it is recommended that it be supplied by the issue of Treasury notes, rather than by loans. The power to issue Treasury notes difference of opinion, or fail to receive the cordial support of a large majority of our constituents.

The connection which formerly existed between the Government and the banks was in reality injurious to both, as well as to the general interest of the community at large. It aggravated the disasters of trade and the derangement of commercial intercourse, and administered new excitement and additional means to wild and reckless speculations, the disappointments of which threw the country into convulsions of panic, and all but produced violence and bloodshed. The imprudent expansion of bank credits, which was the natural result of the command of the revenue of the State, furnished the resources for unbounded license in every species of adventure, seduced industry from its regular and salutary occupations by the hope of abundance without labor, and deranged the social state by tempting all trades and professions into the vortex of speculation on remote contingencies.

The same wide spreading influence impelled also the measures of the Government, curtailed its useful operations, embarrassed the fulfillment of its obligations, and seriously interfered with the execution of the laws. Large appropriations and oppressive taxes are the natural consequences of such a connection, since they increase the profits of those who are allowed to use the public funds, and make it their interest that money should be accumulated and expenditure multiplied. It is thus that a concentrated money power is tempted to become an active agent in political affairs, and all past experience has shown on which side test influence will be arrayed. We deceive ourselves if we suppose that it will ever be found asserting and supporting the rights of the community at large, in opposition to the claims of the few.

In a Government whose distinguishing characteristic should be a diffusion and equalization of its benefits and burdens, no advantage of individuals will be augmented at the expense of the mass of the people. Nor is it the nature of combinations for the acquisition of legislative influence to confine their interference to the single object for which they were originally formed. The temptation to extend it to other matters, is on the contrary, too frequently too strong to be resisted. The influence in the direction of public affairs, of the community at large, is therefore in no slight danger of being seriously and injuriously affected by giving to a comparatively small, but very efficient class, a direct and exclusive personal interest in important portion of the legislation of Congress as that which relates to the currency of the public monies. I laws acting upon private interests cannot always be avoided, they should be confined within the narrowest limits, and let, wherever possible, to the Legislatures of the States. When such measures are likely to lead to combinations of powerful associations, rather than objects that interest public liberty, and promote the general good.

The whole subject now rests with you, and I cannot but express a hope that some definite measure will be acted upon at the present session.

It will not, I am sure, be deemed out of place for me here to remark, that the declaration of my views in opposition to the policy of employing banks as depositories of the Government funds, cannot justly be construed an indication of hostility to those institutions. Though always opposed to their creation in form of exclusive privileges, and, as a state magistrate, uniting to secure to the community against their occasional mismanagement, I have often stood to see them protected in the exercise of rights conferred upon them, and have never doubted their utility. To the government they present themselves merely as state institutions, and as such they may be needed or not by it as a fiscal policy may require. The only proper question upon which their intercourse with the government can be regulated, is that which regulates such intercourse with the private individuals or corporations, and is the question of mutual benefits.

When the government comes to ask a financial operation better with the aid of banks, it should seek it and, as the services of other capitalists, giving the preference to those who will serve it on the best terms. Nor can there ever exist in the officers of the government, as such, any inducements to annoy the banks, any more than to favor the hostility of any other class of state institutions, or of private citizens. It is not in the nature of things that hostility to these institutions can spring from any other cause than when they themselves attempt to usurp powers not conferred upon them, or to subvert the standard of value established by the constitution.—While opposition to these regular operations cannot exist in this quarter, resistance to any attempt to make the government dependant upon them for the successful administration of affairs, is a matter of duty. I trust it ever will be of inclination, no matter from what motive or consideration the attempt may originate.

It is no more than just to the banks to say that in the late emergency, most of them firmly resisted the strongest temptations to extend their paper issues, when apparently sustained in a suspension of specie payments by public opinion, even though in some cases invited by legislative enactments of the honorable character, aided by the countenance of the government, in obedience to the constitution and laws, to the introduction of irredeemable paper, may be attributed, in a great degree, the speedy restoration of our currency to a sound state, and the business of the country to its wonted prosperity.

The banks have but to continue in the same safe course, and to avoid all interference with the government, to secure from it all the protection and benefits which it bestows on other safe institutions, and the people of the states, at the same time, have the benefit of the position, they can not but secure the good will of the general government, which they can easily lose, when they attempt to control legislation, and pervert the operations of the government to its own purposes.

Our experience of the act of last session, to grant preemption rights, has as yet been too limited to enable us to pronounce with safety on its efficacy. There is, however the best reason to anticipate favorable results. The provisions of the former law submitted to you, in respect to a graduation of the price of public lands, remain to be finally acted upon. Having found no reason to change the views then expressed, your attention is therefore respectfully asked to them.

Every proper exertion has been made, and will be continued, to carry out the wishes of congress in relation to the tobacco trade. A favorable impression has I trust, been made in different foreign countries, and although we cannot hope for an early change in their policy, as a large revenue is derived by them from its monopolies, in this article, yet, as these monopolies are really injurious to the people where they are established, and the revenue may be obtained with less tax by from a more liberal system of administration we cannot doubt that our efforts will be eventually crowned with success, if persisted in with firmness and prudent legislation.

In recommending to congress the adoption of the necessary provisions for taking the next census, the suggestion presents itself whether the scope of it might not be extended so as to embrace statistics of the great interests subject by entrusted to Congress.

The accompanying report of the Secretary of War presents a satisfactory account of the army, and the several branches of service under him.

The law organizing the military establishment has been nearly carried into effect, and the army has been extensively and usefully employed during the past season.

I would again call your attention to the subject connected with and essential to the military defence of this country, submitted to you at the last session of congress.

The most important of these is the organization of the militia on the principles and the basis of universal training through the country, which must be also adopted in the rest of the union. I recommend, therefore, the plan submitted by the Secretary of War, for the permanent occupation of the permanent lines of the Indian, and the more efficient protection of the people of Florida from their inhuman warfare.

From the report of the Secretary of the Navy, it will appear that a large portion of the disposable naval force is either actively employed, or in preparation for the purposes of discipline, and the protection of our commerce. No effectual has been the protection afforded, a single outrage has been attempted on a vessel carrying our flag, in any quarter, hitherto exposed.

The Exploring Expedition sailed from Norfolk on the 19th of August last; and information has been received of the safe arrival at the island of Madeira. The best spirit animates the officers and crews, and there is every reason to hope that its early benefits to commerce and knowledge in the season.

It will also be seen that no reduction of the force now in commission is contemplated. The unsettled state of affairs in Europe renders it indispensable that our commerce should receive protection in that quarter; the constitute of the Indian and China seas, in the whale fisheries, require our attention; and a small squadron may be employed to great advantage on the Atlantic coast, for many reasons of the highest importance.

The attention of Congress is respectfully called to the subject of the gun foundery, and the increase of the number of smaller vessels. The wide expansion of our commerce; the necessity of a naval force for its protection; its due regard to the nation of rights and honor, the recollection of former exploits, and the hope of future triumphs whenever opportunity presents; all point to the navy as a no effectual arm of national defence, and a proper object of legislative encouragement.

The condition of the Post Office department will be seen from the report of the Postmaster General. The extent of post roads is 134,816 miles, and the annual transportation thereon is 52,466,000 miles. The number of post offices is 12,553. The gross receipts for the year ending June 30th, was $4,202,145. Accruing expenditure, $4,66,000; leaving a balance of upper dues to make up out of the surplus previously on hand. The cash on hand on the 1st inst. was $334,08. The revenue exceed that of the year previous, $101,; and the expenditure $1,000,000 less than the annual anticipation of a large revenue. A moderate curtailment of mail service consequently became necessary, and has been effected, to the extent of $350,000 per annum.

Your attention is requested to the subject of the transportation of the mails upon rail roads. The law is not adequate to secure this service, as contrasted to the public interest, and the Postmaster General has submitted to you the consideration and unreasonable demands.

Nor can I too earnestly request your attention to the necessity of passing a more secure and safe building for the use of congress.

Your attention is again earnestly invited to the suggestions and recommendations contained at the last session of congress, relative to the location of the seat of government.

I feel it my duty, also, to bring to your notice certain proceeds going on in this district in the name of the U. States, on the relation of Bevans. Was him, in behalf of Maryland, against the Pottomac Company, and which have resulted in the payment of money out of the National Treasury, for the first time since the establishment of the Government, by judicial authority, and in a manner which in my judgment, is unauthorized by the constitution and laws, and subversive of the rights of the states and their citizens in relation to their internal improvements. The case was originally commenced in the circuit court of this district. The facts of the case will be fully stated in the report of the decision. As no appeal was taken to the supreme court from the final decision of the circuit court in favor of the company, the case is to be considered as a voluntary exposition of the law as it was stated, and I most respectfully refer to your consideration.

The object of the application to the circuit court was to compel the Postmaster general to carry into effect an award made under the provisions of the 18th section of an act of Congress, which awards the Postmaster general is decided to be executive until, and he should become further legislative discretion concerning it. By the decision of the circuit court, in the first place, it was to be regarded as an act of legislative character, and in the next place, as a branch of the executive department. It was to be carried into effect by the Postmaster general as a ministerial act, and in the discharge, was ordered to be drawn in question. And if the duty so placed was unconstitutional, and the executive, if it remained to be decided by the judiciary, and if the judiciary passed was unconstitutional, and the executive, if it remained to be decided by the judiciary, and if the judiciary passed was to interfere by mandamus, even in a power having never been to be seen asserted or claimed by that court.

While I am of the opinion that these important questions, the judgment was carried to the U. S. Supreme court. In the opinion of that tribunal the duty imposed on the postmaster general was not an official, executive duty, but ministerial, and that it was properly admitted that with powers and duties properly belonging to the Executive, no other department can interfere by the writ of mandamus; and the question, therefore, presented itself to me, if I had a right to enforce upon the circuit court of this district the power to issue such a writ from officer of the general government connected with the executive department, in the face of which of the court have decided that it has, but have found that they decision upon a process of reasoning which in my judgment, renders further legislation impossible, in the case of conflicting decisions of the courts of the United States decided by the Supreme Court, that neither that tribunal nor the U. S. circuit courts held within the respective states possess the power in question; I therefore, lawful duty, and in all respects better suited to their conditions than the country they have left. for only 3,142 160 acres. We have also, to say there $3,000,000 for their improvement, and $1,500,000 for the purchase of lands in the state of Ind. and we shall be found to exist within the limits of the united continent, it will be owing to that nothing which has been so unjustly assailed.

Of the Cherokees in the south, the time of the expiration of their treaty rights, as to permit them to remain in peace. To the Cherokees the U. States have granted, with a perpetual guaranty of exclusive possession, 12,000,000 acres, for which they have received $5,000,000

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

will be issued on the 20th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Dickens the American poet, sculptured by Powers, and a Wedding Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for this work. Etchings on wood, by Arthur Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and Foreign—sentimental and literary miscellany—occasional notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions of the day not presented for notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art—engravings, music, &c.—notices of the noted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works of other languages, French, German, Italian Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued those desirous of commencing their subscription with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Pay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Thomas Willis, and a list of unsubscribed others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to the most successful and highly popular numbers of the work, extant; furnishing such valuable acquisitions for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country—interesting alike to the friend of our fair and gentle countrywomen, the scholar and student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would tinge unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Dorchy-street, next door to Broadway. Its handsomely printed in extra super-royal quarto form with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, executed expressly with a view to insertion of such a frontispiece. Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editors. No publication received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its ultima is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. It is expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do what he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Scrofulous, Sickness, Pales, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligations that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted in almost all diseases which prevail to a season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended. especially for sacrulous worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

Stoves,

Cheaper than ever!

J. THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally, that they have now on hand a large assortment of stoves of the most approved patterns, fashionable and useful; and as they wish to close their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they were ever before offered in this market. Their assortment consists of Stanley's Rotary of all sizes, Pratley's, Church & Stanley's, James', and all sizes of the nine plate.

Of the above named we have a full assortment, and we also have Parlor of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low; they consist chiefly of Pratley's, Chichester's, Tyrer's, James', Onley's, Wilkins, Gelle and Nine Plate; they are all fitted out with Registers, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to exceed any other stove for beauty and heat; we shall only, that they are now made handsomer and better than ever; and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

Musings on Thanksgiving.

Rejoice ye people of this happy land!
Give thanks to him, from whose own bounteous hand,
All your rich blessings flow,
He's King of Heaven, that glorious, happy place,
And though He's King of Heaven doth deign with grace
To bless us here below.

A change is pleasing to the soul of man,
For him variety through nature ran,
A charm in scenery,
The lofty mountain, and the smiling vale,
The wild wind roaring, and the balmy gale,
Delight enchantingly.

The fragrant, beauteous, lovely rose does Spring,
And joyous Summer golden harvests bring,
And each the warbling minstrel.
Autumn her stores, and philosophic muse,
Winter her fireside joys, and serious truths
Of youth's decaying tinsel.

Firm constancy is loved with greatdelight,
Where'er 'tis seen. The sun with glorious light,
Displays it brilliantly.
The starry heavens, and all the works of God
Are firm, immovable; thus by his rod,
He rules with constancy.

Ask not proud man! because the sun there is,
And starry heavens, do not they were: "where is
The promise of his coming?"
He too is constant, and his word is true;
Give thanks, and praise him, that he may save you,
When sun's to darkness turning.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Examination in Law and Physic.—Our men folks if they can't get through a question how beautiful they can get round it, can't they? Nothing ever stops them. I had two brothers, Joseph and Eldad; one was a lawyer, the other a doctor. They were talking about their examination one night at a huskin frolic, up to the Governor Bull's big stone barn, at Sheckville. Says Josey, when I was examined the judge asked me about real estate, and says he, what's a fee? Why says I, Judge it depends upon the matter of the case. In a common one says I, I call six dollars a pretty fair one; but Lawyer Webster, has got afore now, I have heard tell 1,000; that I do call a fee. Well, the Judge larfed nearly to split his sides, and, says he, I vow that's superfine. I'll endorse your certificates for you, young man; there's no fear of you, you'll pass the inspection brand any how.

Well, says Eldad, I hope I may be shot if the same thing didn't even almost happen to me at my examination. They axed me a nation site of questions; some on 'em I could answes and some on 'em no soul could right off the real at a word, without a little oypherin. At last they axed me, "How would you calculate to put a patient into a sweat when common modes would not do, no how?" "Why" says I, "I'd do as Doctor Comfort Payne served father," "And how was that?" said they. "Why," says I, "he put him in such a sweat as I never seed him in afore, in all my born days, since I was raised, by sending in his bill; and if that didn't sweat him it's a pity; it was an active dose you may depend." "I guess that are chap has cut his eye teeth," Said the President; let him pass as approbated."—Sam Slick.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

Having been interested in the culture of Silk from the beginning and commencing early with a few of the Morus Multicaulis trees, with a view of making gradual progress in the business and testing every question in relation to this valuable branch of domestic industry, I have convinced myself of two important facts,

1st. That this tree will stand the rigors of this climate in its severest seasons. This I have proved by leaving a number of trees out, entirely exposed for the last three cold winters, without the loss of a single tree—but they were so dry ground.

2d. That Silk can be made and reeled with perfect ease, of as good or better quality than that imported. This I have proved also by actual experience, having conducted the business through all its branches, from the planting the tree to the reeling and manufacturing sewing silk of good quality, without ever having seen it done by others. It only remained to ascertain what had been done elsewhere and what was expected to be done, to determine my course, and for this purpose, Mr. Editor, I have travelled many hundred miles, and the result of it all is, that although I was one, if not the very first in the state to commence this interesting business, that I am now a mere novice, and that the sales of trees, although great at present, will continue for years at constantly increasing prices.

Two facts which will speak volumes on this subject, I will relate: A gentleman who has been esteemed the Prince of silk growers employed a man for a long time during the last year, to find out and write to every individual in America, who had these trees, and enquire the quantity and price at which they were held, and the result of this operation is, that he has now prepared 60 acres of land and stock to plant it all. And in Freehold in this State, two acres of land has been rented at the enormous price of $300 per acre, the owner of the land doing the labor, which is about equal to tending so much corn.

These are facts, sir, which should cause farmers and owners of land to enquire for themselves and see whether they should hesitate in embarking 50 or $100 in this enterprise which is calculated to save this nation millions of dollars every year.

It may be asked by some, will this continue? I answer no, without hesitation; but that the prices will decline materially for several years I do not believe, as the demand is well known to increase at present in a much greater ratio than the trees can be multiplied, although they are as easily raised as pig weed or parsley.

Yours, respectfully, T.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

It is probable that the men most distinguished for decision, have not in general, possessed a large share of tenderness; and it is easy to imagine that the laws according to which our nature is formed, will with great difficulty allow the combination of the refined sensibilities with a hardy, never shrinking, never yielding constancy. It is not almost of the essence of this constancy to be free from even the perception of such impressions as cause a mind, weak through sensibility, to relax or waver; just as the skin of the elephant, or the armor of the rhinoceros, would scarcely even feel the application of a fine by which a small animal, with a skin of thin and delicate texture, would be pierced or lacerated to death? No doubt, this firmness consists partly in overcoming, feelings, but it may consist partly too in not having them. To be tremblingly alive to gentle impressions, and yet to be able to preserve, when the prosecuting of a design requires it, an immoveable heart, amidst even the most pernicious causes of subduing emotion, is perhaps not an impossible constitution of mind, but it must be the rarest endowment of humanity.

If you take a view of the first rank of decisive men, you will observe that their faculties have been too much bent to arduous effort, their souls have been kept in too military an attitude, they have been begirt with too much iron, for the melting movements of the heart. Their whole being appears too much arrogated, and occupied by the spirit of severe design, compelling them to work systematically towards some defined end, to be sufficiently at ease for the indolent complacency, the soft lassitude o gentle affections, which love to surrender themselves to the poetical facilities, forgetful of all "enterprizes of great pith and moment." The man seems rigorously intent still on his own affairs, as he walks, or regales, or mingles with domestic society; and appears to despise all the feelings that will not take rank with the grave labors and business of life. He is careless with the unremitting passion which is his spring of action: he values not feelings which he cannot employ either as weapons or as engines. He loves to be actuated by a passion so strong as to compel into exercise the utmost force of his being, and fix him in a tone, compared with which, the gentle affections, if he had felt them, would be accounted tameness, and their exciting causes, insipidity.

Yet we cannot willingly allow that tenderness is totally incompatible with the most impregnable inflexibility: nor can we help believing that such men as Timoleon, Alfred, and Gustavus Adolphus must have been very fascinating, domestic associates, whenever the urgency of their affairs would allow them to withdraw from the interests of statesmen and warriors, to indulge the affections of men: most fascinating, for with a relative or friend who had any perceptions, all the value of their stronger character would be recognized in the gentler one; the man whom nothing could subdue, would exalt the quality of the tenderness which inclined him to recline.

But it were much easier to enumerate a long train of ancient and modern names of men, who have had the decision without the softness. Perhaps indeed they have yielded sometimes to some species of love, as a mode of amusing their passions for an interval, till greater engagements have summoned them into their proper element; when they have shewn how little the sentiment ever belonged to the heart, by the ease with which they could relinquish the temporary favorite. In other cases, where there have not been the selfish inducements, which this passion supplies, to the exhibition of something like tenderness, and where they have been left to the pure sympathies of humanity alone, to rock on the face of the earth could be harder.

The late celebrated King of Prussia occurs to me at this moment, as a capital instance of the decisive character; and there occurs to me at the same time, one of the anecdotes of his life, interesting to make, in the night, an important movement in his camp, which was in sight of the enemy, he gave orders that by eight o'clock all the lights in the camp should be put out under pain of death. The moment that the time was past, he walked out himself to see if all were dark. He found a light in a tent of a Captain Kutern, which he entered just as the officer was folding up a letter Kutern knew him, and instantly fell upon his knees to entreat his mercy: The king asked to whom he had been writing? He said it was a letter to his wife, which he had penned the candle these few minutes beyond the time in order to finish. The king coolly ordered him to rise, and write one line more, which he should dictate. This line was to inform his wife without any explanation, that by such an hour the next day he should be a dead man. The letter was then sealed and despatched as it had been intended; and, the next day the Captain was executed. I say nothing of the justice of the punishment itself; but this cool barbarity to the affection both of the officer and his wife, was enough to brand the character indelibly. It proved how little the philosopher and decisive hero was susceptible of such an affection, or capable of sympathising with its pains.

At the same time, it is proper to observe, that the case may easily occur, in which the man must be resolute to act in a manner which make him appear to want the finer feelings. He must do what he knows will cause pain to persons who will feel it severely. He may be obliged to resist affectionate wishes, expostulations, entreaties and tears. Take this same instance. If the wife of Xistern had come to supplicate for him not only the remission of the punishment of death, but an exemption from any other severe punishment, which was perhaps justly due to the violation of such an order, or so important an occasion, it had then probably been the duty and virtue of the commander to deny the most interesting suppliant, and to resist the most pathetic appeals which could have been made to his feelings.

A Sign.—Out of 46 members of Congress from the free state of New York, who have within the last three years voted for Congressional gags, only four are elected to the 26th Congress. Mr. Kemble and Prentiss members of the present Congress, who voted for Patton's gag, and Messrs Leonard and Vanderpoel, who were members of the last Congress, and voted for Pickney's and Hawe's gag, are all the remain of the host who went to their (political) death in defence of Southern Institutions.

Thirteen of the twenty five members of the present Congress from Pennsylvania are re-elected. Of these Messrs. Beatty, Hammond, S. W. Morris, Paynter, Perriken, and Worgonor, six, voted for Patton's gag. The other seven recreants, Buchanan, Fry, Hubley, Klingensmith, Logan, M'Clue, and Reilly, have leave to stay at home. Messrs. Biddle, Davies, Henry, Ogle, Potter, and Toland, who voted against it, are returned again, and most of the others are succeeded by men who will stand by liberty.—N. York Emancipator.

Scaliger says that the flesh of the peacock never corrupts, and that he himself made the experiment. St. Augustin speaking of the resurrection cites two same circumstance, to prove that there are certain mysteries of which it is impossible to understand the cause.

A flatterer having called the attention of Cromwell, as he was passing near Tyburn, to the multitude of people that thronged about him, and exclaimed, "See what a concourse attends your triumph!" the protector replied with a smile—"There would be a much greater one if I were going to be hanged."

The following remarkable instance of self culture, was related by Gov. Everett in his remarks delivered at the late convention of the friends of education in Bristol co. Mass.

It is a great mistake to suppose that it is necessary to be a professional man, in order to have leisure to indulge in a taste for reading. I believe the mechanic, the engineer, the husbandman, the trader, have quite as much leisure as the average of men in the learned professions. I know some men busily engaged in these different callings of active life, whose minds are well stored with the various useful knowledge acquired from books. There would be more such men, if education in our commons were, as it well might be, of a higher order; and if common school libraries, well furnished, were introduced into every school district, as I trust in due time they will be. It is surprising, sir, how much may be affected, even under the most unfavorable circumstances, for the improvement of the mind, by a person resolutely bent on the acquisition of knowledge. A letter has lately been put into my hands, bearing date the 6th of September, so interesting and strongly illustrative of this point, that I will read a portion of it, though it was written, I am sure, without the least view to publicity.

I was the youngest (says the writer) of many brethren, and my parents were poor. My means of education were limited to the advantages of a district school, and these again were circumscribed by my father's death, which deprived me in the age of 15, of those scanty opportunities I had previously enjoyed. A few months after his decease, I apprenticed myself to a blacksmith in my native village. Thither I carried an indomitable taste for reading, which I had previously acquired through the medium of the society library; all the historical works of which I had at that time perused. At the expiration of half my apprenticeship, I suddenly conceived the idea of studying latin. Through the assistance of an older brother, who had himself attained a collegiate education by his own exertions, I completed my Virgil during the evenings of one winter. After some time devoted to Cicero and a few other Latin authors, I commenced the Greek. At this time it was necessary that I should devote every hour of daylight, and a part of the evening to the duties of my apprenticeship. Still I carried my Greek Grammar in my hat, and often found a moment, when I was heating some large iron, when I could place my book upon before me against the chimney of my forge, and go through with tupto, tuptein, tupsei, unperceived by my fellow apprentices, and to my confusion of face, with a detrimental effect to the charge in my fire. Attevening I sat down unassisted and alone, to the Illiad of Homer, twenty books of which measured my progress in that language during the evenings in another winter. I next turned to the modern languages and laid down my hammer and went to N. Haven, where I recited to native teachers in French, Spanish, German and Italian. I returned at the expiration of 2 years to the forge, bringing with me such sketch books in those languages as I could procure. When I had read these books through I commenced the Hebrew with an awakening desire to examine another field, and by assiduous application I was enabled in a few weeks to read this language with such facility that I allotted it to myself as a task to read two chapters in the Hebrew Bible before breakfast each morning; this and an hour at noon being all the time I could devote to myself during the day. After becoming somewhat familiar with this languaee, I looked around me for the means of initiating myself into the fields of Oriental Literature, and to my deep regret and concern, I found my progress in this direction hedged up by the want of requisite books. Immediately began to devise means of obviating this obstacle; and after many plans I concluded to seek a place as a sailor on board some ship bound to Europe, thinking in this way to have opportunities of collecting at different ports such works in the modern and oriental languages as I found necessary for this object. I left the forge and my native place to carry this plan into execution. I travelled on foot to Boston a distance of more than a hundred miles, to find some vessel bound to Europe. In this I was disappointed, and while revolving in my mind what step next to take, I accidentally heard of the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester. I immediately bent my steps towards this place; I visited the hall of the American Antiquarian Society, and found there to my infinite gratification, such a collection of ancient, modern, and oriental languages, as I never before conceived to be collected in one place; and, sir, you may imagine with what sentiments of gratitude I was affected, when upon evincing a desire to examine some of these rich and rare works, I, was kindly invited to an unlimited participation in all the benefits of this noble institution. Availing myself of the kindness of the directors, I spent about three hours daily at the Hall, which with an hour at noon and about three in the evening, make up a portion of the day, which I appropriate to my studies, the rest being occupied in arduous manuel labor. Through the facilities afforded by this institution, I have been able to add as much to my previous acquaintance with the ancient, modern, and oriental languages, as to be able to read upwards of fifty of them with more or less facility."

I trust, Mr. President, I shall be pardoned by the ingenious author of this letter, and the gentleman to whom it is addressed, for the liberty which I have taken, unexpected, I am sure, by both of them, in thus making it public. It discloses a resolute purpose of improvement, (under obstacles and difficulties of no ordinary kind,) which excites my admiration—I may say veneration. It is enough to make one who has had good opportunities for education, to hang his head in shame.

Tooth drawing without Pain.—It was stated some short time ago in the Philadelphia papers, that a dentist of that city had discovered the existence of a ligament by which as he contended, each tooth was firmly fixed to the jaw, and that by severing this ligament with a knife or lancet, the extraction of the tooth could be effected with little or no pain. Subsequently, however, it was stoutly declared by other dentists that no such a ligament existed, and that its alleged discovery, therefore was a sheer imposition. In the November number of the American Journal of Medical Science, published at Philadelphia, there is an article from the pen of Dr. Goddard, of that city, which declares that such a ligament does really exist: and inasmuch as all who have teeth are likely to take an interest in the subject, we copy his description of it.

"A few months since, an advertisement appeaned in the Philadelphia newspapers, stating that a dentist, by the name of Humphreys, possessed the power of extracting teeth with little force or pain, and by a mode peculiar to himself. Conceiving that he merely possessed an improved form of forceps, or some similar instrument, it excited but little attention on my part. But when I was informed by Mr. Rorer, that another dentist, and the original discoverer of the new method, (Dr. Caldwell,) had taken out a very difficult tooth for him, without pain, and that the new method consisted in cutting with a penknife some thing which held the tooth in its place, I resolved to scrutinize the matter closely.

Accordingly, I sought Dr. Caldwell's acquaintance, but found him determined to keep his discovery a secret. I then procured a jaw, and making a very careful dissection, satisfied myself of the existence of a ligament. This consists of short, strong ligamentous fibres existing on one side of the human tooth only, and uniting the neck of the tooth to the edge of the alveolar process. The fibres arise from the edge of the alveolus between the teeth, and proceeding forward in the case of the molars, and inwards in the case of the incisors, is inserted in the neck of the tooth, not quite the sixteenth of an inch from the edge of the enamel. Its size, and of course its strength, varies with the class of teeth to which it belongs. In the incisores, it is a narrow tape like band—in the cuspidati and bicuspidati, it is wider, and in the molares, it is as wide as the neck of the tooth, and very strong. A few of the fibres are blended with the gum in its neighborhood, and thus we may account for its occasional laceration, when a tooth is extracted. Its adhesion to the tooth is stronger than to the jaw, and, if not cut, is dragged out with the tooth, with great pain. Its ligamentous character is very distinct, the fibres being light and shining, like tendon.

A few words in digestion. I applied to Dr. Caldwell to remove a large molar, which had given me great trouble for two or three years; and, although my tooth had always yielded with great difficulty, he removed the one in question with great ease and very little pain. I have seen several teeth which were extracted by him, and am convinced that he possesses a tact in severing the ligament and removing the tooth which will give him pre-eminent success.

Messrs. Editors.—The annexed piece on slander was selected from an old scrap book; and by inserting it in your paper, you will oblige a subscriber.

On Slander.

'Tis wondrous strange, and yet 'tis true,
That some folks take delight
The deeds of other men to view,
As if their own were right.

And if a piece of news comes out,
They'll eagerly pursue it;
Then hand the charming dish about,
And add a little to it.

Each fault they'll try to magnify,
Yet seeming to bemean
The mote within a brother's eye,
Are blinded to their own.

And if a brother chance to stray,
Or fortune on him frown;
Tho' humbled in the dust he may,
The text is, "keep him down."

They'll preach up penance, with a sigh,
To cure, or nothing can—
Sufferings are good, I'll not deny,
But not when sent by man.

Each worthy deed is now forgot,
As if not worth retaining;
But oh! let failings fill the pot,
And slander sucks the draining.

Unto the dregs she draws it out,
Delighted with her labors,
Then hands the charming drink about,
To treat her thirsty neighbors.

'Neath friendship's mask she sometimes lurks,
And smiling fawns around you;
Concealed, she more securely works,
And kisses, but to wound you.

Detested pest of social joy,
Thou spoiler of life's pleasures;
Like Sampson's foxes wouldst destroy
What's more than all our treasures.

HUSBANDRY.

From the Farmer's Cabinet

Catawissa, Pa. Oct. 31, 1838.

Dear Sir,—Knowing the deep interest that you have taken in the promotion of agriculture, induces me to communicate to you the manner that I have pursued in farming a lot, containing three acres and three quarters, adjoining our town. The lot was formerly covered with yellow pine saplings, and the soil is rather light—I purchased it 14 or 15 years since. I farmed it for 7 or 8 years with wheat and clover alternately, mowing the first crop of clover and ploughing down the second, and sowing wheat after one ploughing, and harrowing it in. I have had 40 bushels of clean wheat to the acre in this way of farming, and found the soil to improve. In the autumn of 1838, I sowed timothy seed shortly after my wheat, and the spring following clover seed also, and had a good crop of wheat in 1834. In July 1835, I cut 16½ tons of excellent timothy and clover hay from this piece of land, worth $12 a ton, $198 00
July, 1836, cut 14½ tons of hay 174 00
July, 1837, cut 15½ tons of hay 186 00
Oct. 1838 had 636 bushels of corn in the ear from 3½ acres of say 318 bushels of corn, at 75 cents, 238 50
Oct. 1838 had from ¼ of an acre of headlands of lot, 30 bushels of potatoes, at 75 cents, 22 50
Oct. 1838, had 200 pumpkins grown among corn, at 1 ct. each, 2 00

Prod. of 3¾ acres for 4 successive yrs. $621 00

In the statement of the corn I have not included 10 or 12 bushels of corn taken from the lot for boiling. JOSEPH PAXTON.

From the Farmers' Cabinet.

Industry, Promptness, and Punctuality crowned with success.—Stephen Girard was the great merchant and banker, was also a great and successful farmer. He owned a farm of several hundred acres of land within a few miles of Philadelphia, the cultivation of which he superintended with his usual industry and acuteness. This farm was his principal hobby; for every day at one o'clock precisely, his gig was in waiting for him at his counting house door, and as soon as the clock struck one he started for his farm in the Neck, not suffering any matter whatever to interfere with his daily visit. During the afternoon he gave his personal attention to the various agricultural affairs requiring it, plying his own hands to any and every kind of business that was in season. In the evening he returned to the city to lodge, and the return of daylight the next morning, would find him again engaged in the labors of his farm. He followed out this routine for twenty or thirty years, permitting no part of his business to suffer from neglect or want of attention. His farm, presented a perfect model for imitation. His grain fields, grass grounds, orchard, and garden exhibited the most luxuriant and perfect appearance, while his stock of every kind and poultry in all their varieties, were also the most perfect that could be found in the country.

A distinguished foreigner, then resident in this country, on a particular occasion, had some special financial business to transact with the great banker, and 12 o'clock was fixed upon for making his visit for that purpose, but he did not arrive till the clock had struck one, he was too late the great banker was gone to his farm, and he followed after; on his arrival he was kindly and courteously received: he was waited upon by the farm and through the barn yard, but not a word could be extracted from Mr. Girard on the subject of his mission. He could now think or talk of nothing but agriculture and rural affairs, and his friend had to return to the city and learn to be more punctual to his engagements in future.

On an occasion many years since, the city authorities were making an improvement at Market street wharf, and there was a large quantity of rich earth that had been accumulating there for a long series of years, to be removed, and any person was permitted to haul away as much of it as he chose without charge. It was deemed a good compost or manure, and no person knew better the value of manure than the rich merchant; he soon had his team at work removing it to his farm; an acquaintance of his who saw him superintending his work, remonstrated with him on account of the avidity and industry with which he engaged in what his friend thought so small a concern:—Oh, says he, "Mr.——I work to-day, if I die to-morrow." S.

Under Beds.—Would you have good under beds constituted of materials that will endure? Then give up the old notion of filling them with straw, which soon becomes worn down to chaff, and requires replenishing once or twice a year,—and, if you have not corn of your own go to some neighbor's husking, and preserve the inner husks of the corn for this purpose. The outer husks are too little stiff; but the inner ones are soft and elastic when dried, and when once you have obtained enough of them to fill a sack dismiss all trouble about that bed for years, for it lasts probably as long as you live. It is quite an object for a family to have all their beds filled in this manner.

From the signs of the times which greet us from almost every quarter, it is manifest that Gen. Wm. H. Harrison of Ohio, will be brought forward as the people's candidate for the Presidency in opposition to the nominee of the office holders. He is a tried patriot and statesman, worthy and well qualified, and the nations interest would be safe and prosperous in his hands. He is moreover as we think, the strongest man in the Union, and, as success is highly important, it is hoped he may receive the solid support of the opponents of the present administration. The National Convention, to be held about a year hence, must concentrate the efforts of the Whigs, and it cannot be doubted that sound policy will rule in that assembly.—Somerset Whig.

A Man's House is his Castle.—In the Court of Oyer and Terminer of Adams county, Pa. last week, came on the trial of A. Fox, on a charge of murder, for shooting a man named Brennon, who, in company with several others, had made an attack upon his shanties, on the line of the Getty sburg Rail Road, on the night of the 9th inst. in pretor's election. The court charged the jury, that a man has a right, in defence of his house, his person and his family, to resist even to the taking away of life; and thus advised as to the law applicable to the case, the jury acquitted the accused without leaving the box.

The disposition for emigration to the West, so far from being checked, has rather increased, we think, of late; and we are sorry to know that many of the most industrious and enterprising citizens of New Jersey, are leaving the homes of their fathers, to seek a home in the wilds of the West. The reader has only to cast his eye over the columns of our newspapers, to see the evidences of this migratory spirit, in the numerous farms offered for sale. This is especially observable in the counties of Morris and Sussex.—N. B. Fredonian.

There is something in the wind.—The Globe has found out that the Bank of the United States is only about one-third as bad as the State banks. The Globe says:

"The United States bank was indeed a 'Monster'—a monster with twenty-five horns—but then it had a head. The league of deposite banks was a greater monster, for it had eighty or ninety horns, and was without a head.

Defalcation.—The city of New York was thrown into considerable excitement on Thursday last, by the sudden departure of Mr. M. Price, Jr. Deputy Assistant Quarter Master, for Europe, in a steam packet, a few hours after the evening previous. It is reported that the defalcation of this late functionary will amount to more than half a million of dollars. He left a letter directed to the President, expressive of his confidence in the disposition and ability of Mr. Swartwout to absolve himself from all obligations with the Government, declining to conduct the proceedings against him, resigning his office of District Attorney. The general impression is that Mr. Price is involved with Mr. Swartwout as a defaulter to the Government.—New Jersey Eagle.

An Attempt to Murder.—On Monday Evening about 8 o'clock, the dwelling house of Mrs Goodfellow, in the village of Piscataway, near this city, was fired into with a rifle or gun containing a charge of three bullets. At the time of the discharge, Mrs. G. and Mr. Henry Noe, were sitting nearly opposite the window, and Mrs. G. moving in another direction at the time, two balls entered the shoulder of Mr. Noe, severely wounding him. They have not yet been extracted, and it is doubted whether he will recover. Who is the perpetrator of his horrid deed remains as yet a mystery. Mr. Noe is an inoffensive and quiet citizen, and it is not known that he has a personal enemy living. Whether the assassin intended to kill Mrs. G. and shot Mr. Noe through mistake, we know not. Be that as it may, we hope the assassin may be brought to speedy and condign punishment, and that every good citizen will do all in his power to ferrit out the villain.—N. B. Times.

The new Printing Press invented by Messrs. W. & T. Schnebly, of Maryland, is described by the Philadelphia Commercial-Herald as remarkable for simplicity.

The power is applied through the medium of an endless screw and lever. A small sog wheel unites with the screw, which is turned by a man with great ease.

There are two cylinders, one upon either side of the platin. These revolve at intervals, adapting themselves to the movements of the press. The sheet is fed over one of the cylinders; and by a reverse rotary motion produced by a very ingenious spring, the sheet is, immediately after receiving its impression, brought back and deposited beneath the cylinder over which it has passed under the platin.

The bed is arranged upon an entirely new principle, viz:—it is inserted upon the side, and may be removed instantly with the form upon it, at will.

This press is calculated, we are told, to print 25 sheets per minute; and may be afforded at $600, a price much less than any power press of equal rapidity.

THE RELIGIOUS SOUVENIR for 1839, edited by Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, published by Leavitt, Lord & Co. New York. This beautiful annual has made its appearance. The engravings are of a high number, and elegantly executed. The contributors are thirty six in number; and among the contributors are Mrs. Sigourney herself, Miss Gould, Mrs. Hale, Miss Sedgwick, Mrs. Opie, and Bernard Barton; all writers of great celebrity, and others who are following hard after them in the path of fame.—The portrait of Mrs. Stewart is, we are told in a former notice, classic in the highest degree, and the sketch of her varied life written by her husband, is a most charming piece of biography. "What is the Bible?" by Mrs. Elizabeth Clementina Stedman, of Plainfield, N. J., is a gem. The article on poetry by Bernard Barton, the poet, pleads high for the 'art divine,' and though written in prose, is itself poetry, as indeed is the whole book; but the gem of gems is that by Miss. H. P. Gould. The Religious Souvenir was commenced by Dr. Bedell of Philadelphia, and we are glad to see that it is likely to maintain its highly literary and religious character.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, December 18, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Pennsylvania.—A very lamentable state of affairs exists between the two parties in the legislature of Pennsylvania, which looks much like civil war. The facts of the case are placed in so different a light, by the party papers, that we have thought it best to give extracts in full, from both sides; and, first, from the Newark Eagle, a fair Administration paper:

The County of Philadelphia sends seven members to the Assembly. At the late election the Administration candidates received a majority of 500 votes; the 17 Judges, whose province it was to canvass the votes and declare the result met and made out the returns accordingly and passed them in the hands of Mr. Burrowes, Secretary of the commonwealth, whose duty it was to lay them before the Assembly at its opening that the members might be admitted to their seats. Subsequently, it appears, six of the 17 judges got together, and after rejecting, on account of some alledged illegality, ten districts, containing one half the votes of the county, found a majority in favor of the federal candidates and made their return to Mr. Burrowes accordingly.

The majority in the Assembly turns on the members from Philadelphia county. In the Senate there is a small whig majority, but not sufficient as is supposed, to give a whig majority in joint ballot if the Administration members from Philadelphia Co. are admitted.

On the 4th inst. the new Legislature assembled at Harrisburg. Both sets of candidates from Philadelphia appeared, but Mr. Burrowes actually refused to deliver to the Clerk the returns from the County of Philadelphia, and substituted in their stead, the garbled statement of the six judges, which gave the federal candidates their seats and excluded the Administration candidates The Administration members called for the regular returns of Philadelphia county, but Mr. Burrowes was among the missing. In the midst of confusion both parties went to work and organized by the appointment of two sets of officers, each availing itself of its claimed candidates from Philadelphia county which gave them a majority of the whole number of votes—thus organizing two seperate Houses of Assembly.—The federalists adjourned about 1 o'clock to meet the next day at 3 P. M. and the democrats continued in session until 2, and then adjourned to next morning 10 o'clock.

The Senate was organized in the midst of uproar and confusion, and it being impossible to proceed with any business, immediately adjourned.

The democrats held a meeting at the Court House that night and appointed a committee of Safety. The federalists also held a caucus.

On the morning of the 5th there was an immense gathering of the people at the court house asserting their determination to maintain their rights, and sustain the Democratic members in the course they had taken.

The democratic Assembly met at 10 o'clock, and after the transaction of some ordinary business adjour. to 3.—In the afternoon both parties assembled and attempted to organize but some little stir and confusion took place, and some gentlemen were scared out at the window. A great bain door was broken down and then the farce ended.

In the Senate the Speaker and his colleagues were among the missing—some of the federalists appearing, the Senate was adjourned.

The democrats proposed that if Burrowes would hand in all the returns, they would remain outside the bar with their opponents until it could be fairly and legally ascertained who were entitled to seats. This would probably end all difficulty. A nothing short of it.

Intelligence having been circulated that the Governor had issued his Proclamation ordering out the militia, and that a quantity of ammunition had been taken to the arsenal and a body of armed men stationed in the building, the excitement became tremendous, and a large multitude of the people collected around the arsenal; but on being assured that the keepers had pledged themselves that no arms or ammunition should be taken from the arsenal to arm any forces that might be a disturbable issue, and we confidently expect an union of sentiment and action among all parties on a subject so interesting to every man's pocket.—Ib.

Pennsylvania.—A very lamentable state of affairs exists between the two parties in the legislature of Pennsylvania, which looks much like civil war. The facts of the case are placed in so different a light, by the party papers, that we have thought it best to give extracts in full, from both sides; and, first, from the Newark Eagle, a fair Administration paper:

The County of Philadelphia sends seven members to the Assembly. At the late election the Administration candidates received a majority of 500 votes; the 17 Judges, whose province it was to canvass the votes and declare the result met and made out the returns accordingly and passed them in the hands of Mr. Burrowes, Secretary of the commonwealth, whose duty it was to lay them before the Assembly at its opening that the members might be admitted to their seats. Subsequently, it appears, six of the 17 judges got together, and after rejecting, on account of some alledged illegality, ten districts, containing one half the votes of the county, found a majority in favor of the federal candidates and made their return to Mr. Burrowes accordingly.

The last of the Cherokees.—The last of these emigrating Indians, about 1800 in number passed through Nashville, Tenn. Sunday, Dec. 2.

of the people," makes the usurpation of the state authorities of the state out of doors, and seating them seizure in the Halls of Legislation—Pennsylvania Law trodden in the dust, and mob law substituted—the Speaker of the House of Representatives turned from his chair, and Judge Lynch seated in his place,—the hands which freed Pennsylvania Hall, sacking the Hall of Representatives,—the "patriots and friends of the Union," who, while engaged in destroying the hall of free discussion, were, if we may believe the editor of the Philadelphia Gazette, surrounded by "25,000 well dressed and respectable men, determined effectually to protect from interruption the insulted agents in the destruction of the building," most ungratefully turning upon their "respectable" protectors, and devouring their own masters!

And now, forsooth, meetings are called in PHILADELPHIA, to denounce mobs! Gentlemen, "respectable and well dressed," gather to Independence Square, and, as their orators plead for law and order, and against "brutal mobs" and illegal proceedings," smite their gold-headed canes upon the pavement in approval.

Later.—From the Newark Daily Advertiser, we gather the following additional intelligence. On Saturday, the Senate formed a quorum, and both divisions of the house transacted business. Both parties issued proclamations, and the Sheriff of the county has also issued his, stating that no necessity existed for the Governor to call out the militia. The Governor, besides calling on the militia and volunteer companies for assistance, also called on the Pre ident of the United States. On Monday morning 1600 troops were in Harrisburg. Commodore Elliott also arrived, with subordinate officers, with authority from the U. S. government to command the U.S. force at Carlisle, or any other means to quell the insurrection. Several arrests for high treason were made. On Saturday, Monday and Tuesday there was no attempt at violence—the Senate and both divisions of the house meeting daily. The troops were ordered to keep still.—Up to Wednesday morning, the governor had not recognized either branch of the house.

In the Senate, on Tuesday, a committee of 7 were appointed, by lottery, to investigate the contested election, as regards the senator from Philadelphia county to the state senate. Four Van Buren men and three whigs were appointed.

On Wednesday and Thursday the troops were mostly dismissed, there being no occasion for them. The governor drew on the state treasurer for $5000 for the expenses of the troops, and the treasurer refused to pay it.

The President of the United States refused to aid in repressing the tumult, saying that there was no evidence before him, that there was any insurrection, in the constitutional meaning of the term.

NOTICE.

☞ The citizens of Plainfield who are interested in the success of the Elizabethtown and Somerville Rail road are requested to meet at the house of Jacob Thorn, on Wednesday evening, the 19th inst. to agree upon a plan for the proper celebration of its completion to our village.

Congress,

Monday, Dec. 10th.

In Senate, Mr. Slicer, a Methodist clergyman, was re-elected chaplain, by a majority of 1 vote.

In the house, a resolution was adopted, for the viva voce system of voting, after considerable debate.

Tuesday, Dec. 11.

The senate were in session but one hour.

In the house, Mr. Atherton, a Van Buren member from New Hampshire, offered a set of resolutions in favor of slavery, which caused considerable exciting debate. Finally, the 1st resolution passed, 196 to 6, and the house adjourned.

Wednesday, Dec. 12.

In the Senate, the bill for graduating the price of the public lands, came up and was postponed to Monday.

In the house, the slavery resolutions occupied the day, and all passed.

Thursday, Dec. 13th.

In the Senate, the postponement of the 4th instalment occupied the day.

Slavery occupied the House.

Weather of 1839.—We gather the following conjectures of what the weather will be during the next year, from the introductory pages of the Anti-Slavery Almanac.

January and the first part of February will be generally milder and less stormy than is usual at this season; the latter part of February, March, and the first part of April will be more than usually blustering and stormy; from the middle of April to September, the weather will be of an unusually uniform character, giving a warm and favorable season; September, October and November will be generally warm and mild; and the winter will come in rather late, with little very cold or stormy weather during December.

Fresh Invasion of Canada.—A party of 300 from the neighborhood of Detroit invaded Canada the 1st inst. burnt one or two villages, and a steamboat, and defeated a party of British militia, then crossed over to their own shore. The whole affair was over in 3 hours. The Canadians say that they will be even with us yet. 75 prisoners. Further intelligence not yet received.

Our Globe Illustrated.

THIS Work is published in weekly numbers, 52 of which will form a splendid volume. Each number will contain a beautiful steel Engraving, and about eight pages of description. It is of the quarto size, and is cheaper than any work yet offered for sale.—Price 12½ cts per number.

Our Globe Illustrated is intended to be what its title implies, a view of the most important and beautiful parts of the whole world, which will be presented to the mind under the most favorable form of handsome engravings and interesting descriptions. It is made so very cheap, because the publishers hope to sell a very large edition, and therefore desire to accommodate families which consider economy an important object.

It will be perceived, by the annexed table of contents that our plan is to give as great a variety as possible.—We presume that no part of the world to another, in such a way as to excite young persons to gain a general knowledge of the History and Geography of the World. A judicious instructor or teacher will find that each one of our prints will furnish him with the means of giving a large lesson to his pupils.

When we state that more than fifty thousand dollars has already been expended upon the work, it will be apparent that great expectations have been formed of its success. Orders have for some time been received at the rate of twenty new subscribers a day. When its admirable use as a family book is taken into consideration, the facility which it affords in teaching geography and history, (and in this point of view we consider mainly its tendency to implant a love of these studies,) it strongly recommends itself to families and schools. It will have a very beneficial effect in cultivating a love of the fine arts, and we hope will contribute to the formation of a correct taste in parts of the country where specimens of good engraving are not readily to be found.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and expound the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to the views by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind he others for more, of earth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless exert a mighty influence on weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true redemption of our five hundred millions. Therefore, we well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With the close of the present year we look for a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the various intelligence, and the means of keeping information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

All paper will be stop d after the subscription is expired All authorized agents of the Abolitionary Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its object aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each comprise a year. The one commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved te be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterica, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.
Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in case of fever, I must say to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and I resorted to in season, they will prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended: especially for sacrides worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or diappepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 31st day of October.

It will contain a Portrait of Col. Crockett, the celebrated pioneer, engraved by Rawdon, Wright, Hatch & Harding, and a Vignette Title Page, from a design executed by them expressly and engraved by Alexander Jones, by the same artists and engraver. Also, two original paintings expressly for its work. Drawn on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also adorn the forthcoming volume; besides many pieces of music, both vocal and instrumental, arranged to the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays—humorous and pathetic—critical notices of the most choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, with independents engaged expressly and exclusively for the Mirror—criticisms upon the various productions of fine arts that are presented for the notice and appreciation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the actual drama and other amusements—extracts from the best and rarest works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the volume will please to make early application, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Meade, Morris, Pelt, Dr. Caleb Cushing, Sheridan Knowles, Bryant, Longfellow, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, assistance, and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, and the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superior, to any of its predecessors. It is unnecessary to intimate that no work extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, study, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable mélange of elegant literature, as well as no ornament to the periodicals of the country—intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a pinch of taste or refinement—and which the Mirror never will commit a single word or sentence that would wherein unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to the Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, on superior, minion, and nonpareil type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid, super royal quarto steel engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paidmust be addressed to the editor. Subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

The Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a controlling influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true deliverance of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise in a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

While we believe we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

Terms.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who wish for a specimen for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired till authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

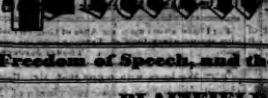
POETICAL.



For the Plainfield Union.

The Student.

Oh could you see him at the midnight hour,
When the big tear would start, and his face lower
With dark foreboding of his future fame;
For he had heard of envy, dreaded name,
And felt—though young—had felt her biting tooth,
Who poisoned more by never heeding truth.
Oh! had you known his agony of heart,
As he was pierced by that black poisoned dart;
How all his joys to torture then were turned,
And how deep anguish in his bosom burned;
How all the tender sympathies in life,
Were with a thrilling torment making strife!
A tear would fall, unbidden, for his sake,
Were your heart colder than the frozen lake.

Stay! dry that tear—all is not pain, oh no!
And if it were, "pain is a good;" although
It may seem strange. If constant we do love
Any companion. Even as a dove
We moan, and sigh, when severed from its arms,
And think grim visaged features taiest charms.
All is not pain—for thrilling pleasures dart,
With quick succession through the student's heart.
See him again at midnight with his lamp,
How in his eye and face joy's brightness stamp,
As he reads o'er the story of great men,
And feels the joys of glory even then.
He fancies fortune thus on him may smile,
And never dreams of fraud, deceit or guile—
He paints the world in fancy's fairest hues,
In wreaths with noble men his name he twines.
Hush, snarling cynic! and blame not the youth,
These fancies frequently do end in truth,
If vain, they're pleasing; and why dash from lips,
The harmless cup of pleasure which he sips?
'Tis then ambition's fire doth fill his soul,
And glowing passions in his bosom roll;
His thoughts fly forth, his glossy eye looks wild,
He seems in truth e'en nature's loftiest child.
'Tis then he feels those pleasures common men
Have never felt, nor thought within their ken.

Philo.

Nine Tailors make a man.—This sentence, which had its origin in the grateful mind of one who had received his start in life from the charity of the rich, has now, from an ignorance of the circumstance, entirely lost its meaning. The term had its origin in the following manner. In 1742, an orphan beggar boy applied for almsat a fashionable tailor's shop in London, in which 9 journeymen were employed. His interesting appearance opened the hearts of the benevolent tailors, who immediately contributed 9 shillings for the relief of the little stranger. With the capital our little hero purchased fruit, which he retailed at a profit. From this beginning, he rose to great wealth and distinction, and when he set up his carriage, he had painted on the panel, "Nine tailors made me a man."

Anecdote of Dr. Franklin.—In Philadelphia, the merchants, many years since, set up an assembly for dancing, and desirous to make a distinction, and to assume a rank above the mechanics, they at first proposed this among the rules for regulating the assembly:—That no mechanic, or mechanic's wife or daughter should be admitted on any terms." These rules being shown by a manager to a friend (Franklin) for his opinion, he remarked that one of them excluded God Almighty. "How so?" said the manager. "Because," replied the friend, he is notoriously the greatest mechanic in the universe, having as the scripture testifies, made all things, and that by weight and measure." The intended new gentlemen became ashamed of their rule, struck it out, and no such distinction has ever since been made there.

Fashions, 1835.—"Dear mother, you must let me have fourteen yards in my new frock. Mrs. Thompson says she can't get a pair of sleeves out of less than seven. And you know, mother, that a dress would look so bad with stinted sleeves —Did you see Miss Mizer's new dress, how awkward it looked—be sleeves all scrimped up, and she had five yards in them—you must get me fourteen, mother.

1838.—"Oh mother, I do wish you would let me get my purple silk dress altered, those great sleeves look so awkward and bungling. I positively can't wear them, they are perfectly frightful. Do, dear mother, let me have them quite tight—small sleeves look so neat and graceful."

Mr. Slade's Vote.—The man who moved for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, is re-elected to the 26th Congress by a majority of 2,141! If we are not mistaken, this is a larger majority than has been given to any other member in any state. Our abolition leader is therefore the tallest and strongest man in the house. So it ought to be.

N. B. We have to spoil a good story, but on a second examination, we find that Mr. Gayes the secretary of the Leroy, anti-slavery Society has a majority in the Genesee district, of upwards of THREE THOUSAND. We dare say there will be no quarrelling between the two.—N. Y. Emancipator.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF A ROBBER.

The following graphic account of a robber's death is from "Burton, or the Sieges," by professor Ingraham.

The door partially opened as the bolt fell its head, and through the crevice Pascalet saw the old man at his bench intently occupied at his labor, with his pile of gold and silver giving before him. He looked down and clenched his dagger; then, glancing again at the miser, seemed to hesitate whether he should become both an assin and robber. The helpless appearance of the victim seemed to plead even to him for pity. Replacing his stiletto, which he had taken from his bosom, he drew up his sleeves, and, applying his foot lightly to the door, it flew wide open; and two bounds, that gave back no sound as his unshod feet touched the floor, he was at the old man's side, with his fingers clasped around his throat.

His eyes started from their sockets, his lips vainly essayed to articulate; a sovereign which he had just taked up fell to the floor; the clippers dropped from his hand; pain and terror were horribly depicted on his withered visage. For an instant Pascalet held him thus; then gradually relaxing his grasp before life should escape, he held him by his throat with one hand, while suspending his knife over him with the other, he threatened him with instant death if he moved or spoke. Joseph clasped his hands and silently plead for mercy. Pascalet knew not the meaning of the term.

Leading him, exhausted by suffering and terror, to his cot, he caused him to lie down upon his face. "I'll bury my dagger in thy withered carcass," he whispered in his France English (but for the sake of energy, we give the purer English) in his ear, "if thou stir hand or foot. Tell where thou hast hidden thy gold or thou diest."

"Gold? Oh, I am not worth a he'penny in the world."

"Thou liest; and speak above thy breath again, and thou shalt taste my knife. 'Twas thy former foul deed not feel its edge ere now, instead of the grips of my fingers. Whose gold is this if not thine?"

"Oh, the colony's, the colony's; sen to me to be weighed," he cried, rolling his eyes in despair towards the piles.

"The colony's. Then I'll go debtor to the state the full sum, and not harden my conscience by robbing a poor wretch," he said, advancing to the bench heaped with coin. "Ha, mort de vie!" he exclaimed, as he detected the tray of clippings; "is this the way thou servest the state's money? I'll throw them before the governor, and have thee hung higher than ever Haman was."

"Mercy, good youth," said Joseph, his eye brightening, "'tis not the state's! I meant it in jest. And since thou sayest it will go against thy conscience to rob a poor wretch, 'tis mine own!"

"Thou art then no poor wretch, if thou owndest all this gold; so my conscience will be clear on this score."

"But 'twill make me a poor wretch, if thou rob me of it."

"Then, when, thou art made a poor wretch, I will not rob thee. So conscience hath it both ways."

Dominie Joseph groaned in bitterness of spirit. Pascalet, unheeding him, proceeded, keeping an eye on his victim, who seemed to be paralyzed as if under the gaze of a basilisk, to convey the dollars and sovereigns to his pocket, without being nice in selecting the clipped from the uncliped.

"Now, old Nicodemus," he said, "I'll leave thee thy clippings for thy pains. But thou hast more coin than this, I'll warrant thee."

"As true as there's a heaven above, and a judgment day to come I have not another penny. I am impoverished, and must beg my bread about the streets. Oh, mercy, good youth, mercy! do not rob a poor wretch! think on thy conscience."

"Have I not argued that point with thee? so hush, and give me thy keys," he added, approaching where the old man had been laying tumbling and groaning, with his eyes directed towards the robber, as sovereign after sovereign disappeared in capacious repositories in the habiliments of Pascalet. "Untie that thong, or my knife shall do it for thee."

"Tis but the key of the outer door. O, mercy. Oh!"

Pascalet pressed his hand roughly upon his mouth, and his dagger cut the string. Having possession of the keys, he began to examine the rooms. After making an unsuccessful search, he suddenly advanced upon the miser, and said with terrible emphasis, placing his mouth close to his ear,—"Tell me where lies thy money, or thou diest!" and the point of the dagger pressed painfully against the skin of his victim.

Dominie Joseph, as if terrified into compliance pointed to the chimney, crying in the accents of despair, "There! there it!"

Pascalet seized the light to explore it, and the old man's face lighted up with something like a smile at the temporary delay he had gained. He closely searched the fire-place, turning up every loose brick, and even looking up the chimney, but in vain. "Old man!" he said, advancing to him fiercely, "thou hast deceived me!" he raised his arm to strike the dagger into his back, when Joseph, in the extremity of unfeigned alarm, cried out, "Mercy, stay! I'll tell thee!"

Pascalet bent down, and seeing the, but his eyes sparkled with pleasure. Finding that it was secured by a bolt, he made the old man, lest he should attack him while at work, lie on his face upon the floor. Dominie Joseph stretched himself upon the floor, as if he were lying down to die, trembling and tortured at the prospect of losing his wealth; yet his eyes anxiously watching every movement of the robber, as he displaced the cot, kneeled, fitted the key to the lock, and raised the lid. Then did the heart of Joseph Gerrett grow faint within him; but, as he heard the silver ring in the sacrilegious hands of Pascalet, who surveyed his treasure with delight and wonder, he cast his eyes desperately upon the blunderbuss which hung at the head of the bed. He then glanced at the well-knit frame of Pascalet and the glittering dagger, and, shutting his eyes despairingly groaned aloud.

Pascalet, after surveying for a moment the glittering heaps he had discovered, proceeded to transfer them to his own person. He filled his pockets, and then stripping from his neck his yellow handkerchief, commenced filling it with dollars. He at length became so absorbed in this delightful occupation, that he forgot Dominie Joseph, his own situation, and indeed every thing but the piles of money before him. Not so with Dominie Joseph. As his alarm subsided, his intentness and presence of mind increased, and he began to meditate, even at the risk of his own life, defending his property. He therefore saw with no little pleasure, that the attention of the robber was fixed wholly upon his treasure, and that in his eagerness, he had laid down his dagger at his side. He desperately resolved to gain possession of the weapon. Therefore, to ascertain what prospect he had of succeeding, he made a slight noise with his foot upon the floor. The robber did not notice it. He then moved his whole person, but Pascalet only heard the sound of his gold and silver. A third and somewhat bolder movement attracted no attention; and the old man, emboldened by success, his face became rigid with determination, as he drew himself along the floor towards the bed, which stood between him and the robber. Inch by inch he worked himself along under the cot until he came within reach of the dagger. He stretched forth his arm and seized it in his long bony fingers with the resolute grasp which the terrible urgency of the occasion gave him; and then, with equal coolness, drew himself back from beneath the cot until he could stand upright. He now grasped the dagger more firmly, rose to his feet, and leaning over the bed, raised it in the air.

"Mort de vie!" said Pascalet to himself, "I shall ride in my coach."

The next instant the dagger was buried to the hilt in his back. He fell as he was transferring the last gold coin to his handkerchief; glared wildly at the old man, clenching his fingers as if he would grasp him; and then with a curse trembling on his lips, he died.

Decision of Character, by Foster.

Various assignable circumstances may contribute much to confirm the character in question. I shall just notice two or three.

And first, opposition. If the passions which instigate any resistance and sustain them in it, such as anger, indignation, and resentment, are evidently far stronger than those which have reference to friendly objects; and if any of these strong passions are frequently excited by opposition, they infuse a certain quality into the general temperament of the mind, which remains after the immediate excitement is past. They continually strengthen the principle of resistance; they put the mind in the habitual temper of defence and self-assertion, and often give it the aspect and the posture of a gladiator, when there appears no confronting combatant. When these passions are felt by the man whom I describe, it is probable that such excitement is followed by a greater increase of this principle of re-action than in other men, because the result is so congenial with his naturally resolute disposition. Let him be opposed then, through the whole course of an extended design, or in the general tenor of his actions; and this constant opposition would render him the service of an ally by corroborating his inflexibility. An irresolute mind indeed might be quelled and subjugated by a formidable kind of opposition; but the strong wind which blows out a taper, augments a powerful fire, if there is fuel enough, to an indefinite intensity.

I believe that you will find in fact that many of the individuals most eminently decisive in conduct have made their way through opposition and contest, in which they have acquired both a prompt acuteness of faculty, and an inflexibility of temper, which even strong minds could never have attained in the tame security of facile friendly coincidence. Very often however, it is granted, the firmness matured by such discipline is accompanied, in a case of virtue, with a Catonic severity, and in a case of vice of the world, with an unhumanized repulsive hardness.

Desertion is another cause which may conduce to consolidate this character. A kind, mutually reclining dependence, is certainly the happiest state of human beings; but this necessarily prevents the developement of some great individual powers which would be forced into action by a state of desertion. I lately noticed, with some surprise an Ivy, which being prevented from attaching itself to the rock beyond a certain point had sent off like a bold chaste stem, with an air of as much independence as any branch of oak in the vicinity, like a human being, thrown, whether by cruelty, justice, or accident, from all social support and kindness, if he has any vigor of spirit, and is not in the bodily debility, of extreme childhood or age, will naturally begin to call for himself, with a resolution which will appear like a new faculty. And the case of absolute imbecility is likely to characterize the resolution of an individual who is obliged to deliberate without consultation, and execute without assistance. He will disdain to consult on things that have rejected him, or to forego a single article of his designs or advantages for the sake of the opinions or the will of all the world. Himself, his pursuits and his interests, are intellectually his own. "The world is not his friend, nor the world's law," and therefore he becomes regardless of every thing but its own power.

If this person has but little humanity or principle, he will become a misanthrope, or perhaps a villain, that will resemble a solitary wild beast of the night, which makes prey of every thing it can overpower, and cares for nothing but fire. If he is capable of grand conceptions and enterprise, he may, like Spartacus, make a daring attempt against the whole social order of the state where he has been oppressed. If he has great humanity and principle, he may become one of the noblest of mankind, and display a generous virtue to which society had no claim, and which it is not worthy to reward, if it should at last become inclined. No, he will say, give your rewards to another; as it has been no part of my object to gain them, they are not necessary to my satisfaction. I have done good either by expecting your gratitude, and without caring for your approbation. If conscience and my Creator had not been more auspicious than you, none of these virtues would ever have opened to the day. When I ought to have been an object of your compassion, I might have perished; now, when you find I can serve your interests, you will affect to acknowledge me and reward me; I will not accept your rewards.—In either case, virtuous or wicked, the man who has been compelled to do without assistance, will scorn interference.

Common life would supply illustrations of the effect of desertion. A number of absolute men have become such, partly from being left friendless in early life. The case has also sometimes happened, that a wife and mother, remarkable perhaps for gentleness and acquiescence before, had been compelled, after the death of the husband on whom she depended, and when she has met with nothing but neglect or unkindness from relatives and those who had been deemed friends to adopt a plan of her own, and has executed it with a resolution which has astonished even herself.

I am sorry that the signal examples which occur to my memory under this article, whether real or fictitious, are still of the depraved order. I fancy myself to see Marius sitting on the ruins of Carthage; or Belisarius, or any other unabased unshaken amidst the desolation, could present a stronger image of a firmness beyond the power of calamitous events to subdue. The rigid constancy which had before distinguished his character, would be aggravated by his finding himself thus an outcast from all human society; and he would proudly shake off every sentiment that had ever for an instant checked his designs by reminding him of social obligations. The lonely individual was placed in the alternative of becoming the victim or the antagonist of the power of the empire. While, with a spirit capable of confronting that power; he probably amidst those ruins resolved on a great experiment, he would enjoy a kind of sullen luxury in surveying the dreary situation, and recollecting the circumstances of his expulsion; since they would seem to him to sanction an unlimited vengeance, to present what had been his country as but one legitimate prize for desperate achievement, and to give him a proud consequence in being reduced singly to maintain a quarrel against the bulk of mankind. He would exult that his desolate condition gave him a proof of his possessing a mind which no misfortunes could repress or intimidate, and that it kindled an animosity intense enough to force that mind from its wonted endurance into impetuous action. He would feel as if he became stronger for enterprise, in proportion as he became more inexorable; and the sentiment with which he quitted his solitude would be, Rome expelled her patriot, let her receive her evil genius.

The decision of Satan, in Paradise Lost, is represented as consolidated by his reflections on his hopeless banishment from Heaven, which oppress him with sadness for a moment, but he soon assumes his invincible tone, and utters the impious but sublime sentiment,

"What matter where, if I be still the same!"

You remember how this effect of desertion is represented in Charles de Moor. His father's supposed cruel rejection consigned him irretrievably to one career: extinguished every hope, which, notwithstanding the most interesting emotions of humanity and tenderness, he persisted with heroic determination till he considered his destiny as accomplished.

Success tends considerably to reinforce this character. It is true that a man possessing it in a high degree will not lose it by occasional failure; for if the failure was caused by something entirely beyond the reach of all human knowledge and ability, he will remember that fortitude is the virtue required in meeting unalterable events which in no sense depend on him; if by something which might have been known and prevented, he will feel that even the experience of failure augments his competence, by admonishing his prudence, and enlarging his understanding. But as all schemes and measures of action have reference to some end, consequently future events about something essentially arrange in a

Published every Saturday morning, at the City of New York.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

☞ We learn with regret that Mr. Richard Cowell, a genial and respectable citizen of New Market, near this place, while fodde[illegible]ing his cattle, on Monday afternoon, the 17th inst. fell from a hay mow in his barn, and, though he got up and walked into the house, he was so much injured that he died in about two hours. He was about 70 years of age.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The most important intelligence now afloat is the state of parties in the Pennsylvania Legislature, of which we gave a full account in our last paper, as late as we could then obtain; and we think it best to devote a considerable portion of this week's paper to the same subject. Things remained in much the same situation as given in our last paper, up to Monday, the 17th inst. the proceedings of which day, we copy as follows, from the Newark Daily Advertiser:

Important from Harrisburg.—An extra from the Harrisburg Reporter, of Monday evening, brings the important intelligence that three of the whig members of the House of Representatives, Messrs. Butler and Sturdevant from Luzerne, and Mr. Montelius from Union county, withdrew, on Monday morning, from their political associates and joined the Van Buren division of the house, thus securing to that branch a majority, without the votes of members from Philadelphia county, and having the whig division without a quorum. This of course will settle the question.

Their appearance in the V. B. House was duly announced by Mr. Smith, of Franklin, when, before going forward to subscribe the requisite oaths, Mr. Butler addressed the house, in behalf of himself and his associates. He said that careful examination of the subject since the meeting of the Legislature had satisfied them that they were now acting right; if all the facts of the case had been known at the organization, the result would have been different, and the late evils been prevented. He spoke of "a solemn sense of duty" —even the Globe does that—that there was no hope of safety from negotiation, for the effort had failed, and the last hope was in their present step. Party considerations, pride of opinion and of acting must be "offered up a willing sacrifice to the public good—every thing but principle; they were ready, Curtius like, to plunge into the gulf that was yawning before them, if by doing it could be closed." They did "not over-estimate the consequences of this act, and believed it might terminate the prevailing anarchy."

After Mr Butler closed his remarks, the 3 announced by Mr. Smith were duly qualified and took their seats as members of the house.

In the Senate, on Monday, a report was presented by the minority of the committee appointed on the contested election case in the 8th district.

A committee of 7 was appointed on the contested election case between Wm. Wagner and Samuel Stevenson, of Philadelphia county.

A committee of 7 was also appointed in the contested election case between Messrs. Brooke and Bell of Chester county, all whigs, as in the other committee, save one member.

We have not room to address to his constituents published by Mr. Montelius, one of the succeeding whig members. The movement of the three seceders, will increase the V. B. vote in the house to 51, exclusive of the 8 V. B. candidates from Philadelphia county, and give it a quorum, the whole house consisting of 100 members. The whig division of the house consists of only 49 members, including the 8 whig candidates from Philadelphia, whose seats are contested. So that according to present appearances the Senate will probably recognize the house containing the quorum, and thus end the contest every; and the Philadelphia Van Buren candidates will also probably be admitted, as their friends have a majority of 4 in the house.

If they are admitted the House will stand 56 Van Buren men and 44 whigs. According to the estimates of the Journal of Commerce there will be a V. B. majority of one on joint ballot, if all the Whig Senators whose seats are contested be admitted. There are 3 seats yet to be adjudicated. The presumption is that the whig candidate from Chester county, and the two V. B. candidates from Philadelphia county, will be admitted. To this case there will be a Van Buren majority of three on joint ballot. Mr. McKean is the U. S. senator whose term expires.

Mr. Montelius' Address.

To the electors of the district composed of the counties of Union, Juniata and Mifflin.

Fellow citizens:—I have been in a deplorable situation for eight or ten days past. I was elected your representative, as such I am bound faithfully to discharge my duty to you, my self, to God and my country. You are already informed that there were two speakers elected on the 4th inst. in the house of Representatives. With the information I had and the advice of the friends in whom I had confided, I was induced to act here with the party who profess the same principles with those of my constituents, who elected me. But full information, cool and deliberate reflection, and the warnings of my conscience have convinced me that my party friends have been mistaken their course, and that as a faithful representative, and an honest man, I was bound to retrace my steps, do what I conscientiously believed to be right, and trust to the impartiality of your judgments upon a full and fair examination of all the facts.

Finding my political friends had done wrong in my judgment, I withdrew from them immediately, and have waited for several days to give them time to retrace their steps; and to allow all misapprehensions that had arisen, (for there has not been accomplished, I have nothing left for me, but to do that which I believe to be right, as I leave to those who would destroy our beloved state, the consequences of their rashness. Do not think I have acted rashly. The step I have taken was taken deliberately and coolly, and in obedience to my understanding of the constitution and laws of our dear country; I am for peace. "Es ward mei ner seele lang" as a woman boy denen diden frieden hassen," and I hope the course I had taken may help to save our beloved Pennsylvania from bloodshed and the horrors of a civil war. The great question is whether the majority shall rule upon this question, I am willing to abide all their will.

Now all I have done has been done with an honest desire to carry out this great principle in our free Government, that the minority must yield to the majority. And I am certain not one vote however, strong a party man he may be, will put me me for maintaining this principle. My constituents, particularly in the Union county, all know me, and I beg of them all before they condemn me, fully and coolly to examine all the facts I have not in the instance, acted as a party man but I have acted honestly, and according to my conscience.

In joining with my party friends in organizing the House of Representatives with the Philadelphia county members of the whig party, I thought these had been elected by a majority of the votes of the county, and had been returned by a majority of the judges, but I soon found that it was not true, and that the eight members of the opposition party in the county of Philadelphia had been elected by a majority of about five hundred votes in the whole county, and had been returned elected by a majority of the judges.

I am sorry to say that the secretary of State kept back these returns which I think was wrong. Under these circumstances, I could not continue to act with men who had no right to their seats, not more than my opponent had to mine. You would not an honest man ask me to sanction so bad a principle, and it is that I know your honesty that I have joined those who have been fairly elected by a majority.

My party opinions and principles have not changed and my future course will show that I am true to those principles. On your calm judgment I rely. What I have done has been done for what I believe to be your interest, and is approved by my conscience.

I am your friend;
JOHN MONTELIUS.

Township Meeting.

The democrats of the township of Westfield, and those opposed to the conduct of the clerks of the counties of Middlesex and Cumberland, in retaining a part of the votes; and of the governor and a majority of his Privy Council in refusing to preserve the same, that the rights of the people might be preserved, are requested to meet at the house of John M. Clark, Westfield township, on Thursday, 27th inst. at 6 o'clock, P. M. to appoint delegates to the state convention, to be held at Trenton, on the 8th of January next, and to transact such other business as may come before them.

Westfield township, Dec. 20th, 1838.

Jersey City Advertiser.—This Journal, Henry D. Holt, Esq. editor and proprietor, has recently passed from a semi-weekly, to a weekly paper, and much enlarged. It is not too much to say, that in the quantity of reading matter, cleanness of print, and fineness of paper, it is not excelled by any weekly paper in the state, and in editorial talent, exceeded but by few.

Morristown Democratic Banner.—The Banner passed last week into the hands of Mr. Louis C. Vogt, its third editor, who promises to be its constant editor for the future, as it is now considered as put upon a permanent footing. It is an interesting and well conducted paper.

Our Globe Illustrated.—We have full sets of this splendid and cheap publication now on hand, as far as published, and shall send for them as fast as pub lished. All are invited to call and look at, purchase, or subscribe for these most beautiful steel engravings, now offered for sale; and at the very low price of two engravings for 12½ cents, with descriptions. The engravings are by European artists, the work being first published in Germany, and the descriptions are translated.

For further particulars see advertisement; we have four numbers in addition to the twenty advertised.

Littell's Museum of Foreign Literature, Science and Art.—This is a monthly publication, each number containing 144 very large pages, and equal to a common octavo volume of 600 pages. It comprises all the best of all the foreign annual, quarterly, monthly and weekly publications, near sixty in number, and makes three large volumes yearly, at $5 a year, or two dollars a volume. It is the best magazine in the world, being three times as large as the average, and containing the best of all of them. Advertisement next week. Subscriptions received here, where a specimen of the work can be seen.

Subscriptions also received here for "Littell's Spirit of the Magazines and Annuals," a work about half as large as the Museum, containing its lighter portions, at three dollars per annum, in advance. It can be seen at this office.

The prizes of the Eleventh Annual Fair of American Institute are just ringing from all quarters. It is now universally accorded, that such public exhibitions are the best possible modes which could be devised, to impart the greatest quantity of useful knowledge in the shortest time. They are doing more to elevate and dignify the mechanic, the artisan and the manufacturer, than all the other means added together. At the same time that they excite those who enter this arena of emulation, their immediate tendency and termination is, in multiplying the the necessaries and comforts of life. An enthusiasm is awakened that conduces, not to pamper the pride and the ambition merely of industrious skilled nobleman, whose magnificent palaces under among huts, hovels and sheds, but a bodies of serfs and vassals; but it is an enthusiasm which dispenses enjoyments among the people at large, who are independent freemen—lords of the soil—and who acknowledge no superior but that which merit has earned.

The principle of equality is sanctified by the blood of the Revolution. All honor, and power, and glory is in the people, and they who most contribute to the advancement of their liberty and happiness, are entitled to and will, ordinarily, receive the richest rewards at their disposal. The American Institute affords an illustrious instance in corroboration of this position. A determined effort was made, we are known and sincere, but failed to strangle it in its infancy. A petition for a naked act of incorporation, simply to encourage our national industry, was repudiated by an honorable senator from this city, and with the most acrimonious hostility; and when the good sense and patriotism of more than two thirds of that dignified body had sanctioned its passage by their votes, a desperate effort was made by the same individual to arrest its progress in the House of Assembly. In his bitterness, he forgot both his personal and official dignity, and descended to the degrading position of an electioneerer. The friends of domestic industry rallied, and it was carried by a triumphant majority. They believed the appl cants sincere in their devotion to the great cause, and ten years of disinterested exertion has proved that they believed truly.

And what is now the condition of this then persecuted band of associates? They have reared an establishment that, with a patronage equal to that which has been bestowed on institutions we could name, would soon vie, in usefulness, with any of which christendom can boast. The operations we know, will be liable to be ascribed to the agency of feeling influencing a heated imagination, the illusions of one's taste in favor of the spring of his youth; but let such unbelievers point to a single institution in the world's wide range, nurtured by the rich, unaided by governmental city or state, that has accomplished as much. Your rich men, your city and your state rulers, have looked and admired, and applauded, but their bounties to it were, (saving few or small have never been vouchsafed to the value of a peppercorn, on the one side. They have been accustomed to give their names and their influence thousands. A dignity has been conferred on the abstract sciences,—and the magic abstract has greater the dignity,—that merited exclusive celebrity;—where languages are taught that never are spoken, and from whence students periodically sally into the world with names crammed full with unpronounceable nouns.

Such institutions are deemed by some ethereal, and in one respect they literally are—the deductions they teach are intangible. If these institutions deserve all bounty, and those which teach the means of living and the supplies necessary for health, and comfort, and even life, are not worthy to partake, then all our boasted advances in knowledge are vain, and we indeed, have mistaken visions for realities. We desire not to be misunderstood. We shall be the last to decry science; but let us have science applicable to some useful purpose, and let us test its utility by application. Without application science is but vain.

The American Institute, though not a school in the ordinary sense of the term, has been signally successful in teaching great practical truths in agriculture, manufactures, and the mechanic arts that have increased production in every occupation. The farmer has been not only taught that a most precious staple may be added to the list of productions but early and unwearied exertions have been made to supply the sustenance required by the insect that produces it. The history of the labors of the silk committee, formed immediately after the first organization of the Institute, affords abiding evidence of the fact. The necessity of protection against the all powerful competition of foreign skill, cap ital and labour, has been urged by reports, addresses, resolutions and petitions without remission. It has been demonstrated, that unrestricted competition with foreign pauper labor would engender pauperism here. Every improvement calculated to abridge the labor of the manufacturer and the mechanic, and increase their profits, have been not only exemplified at the Annual Fairs, but in the Repository, but their meritorious qualities have been published far and wide. Zeal and ingenuity have been stimulated by rewards bestowed, to the full extent of the means at command, by diplomas, medals and money. The ingenious mechanic has been brought forth from obscurity and poverty, and his name and his fame have been shown to the people of the whole country, with the scrap of metal appointed upon it by the American Institute. Competence has thus succeeded deprivation and want, where it was deserved, and in instances not a few, by the means supplied, affluence and even opulence has taken the place of poverty and degradation.

By the last accounts, the Hudson was open to Poukill Landing, 60 miles from New York. At Poughkeepsie, on the 10th inst. the mercury stood at one degree below zero.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Vera Cruz Taken.—By the French Steamboat Meteor, arrived last night in sixty hours from Vera Cruz, intelligence is received that the castle of San Juan de Ulloa was taken by the French fleet after a bombardment of three hours, with the loss of only four men by the blockading squadron, while from four to five hundred Mexicans were killed. In the same ship came a messenger who has hurried on to Washington, being the bearer of important despatches. From the Courier we take the following particulars of the bombardment;

On the 28th of November, the French Admiral Baudin sent word to the Mexican General Rincon, that he was about to attack the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa. About 9 o'clock the same day, three French Frigates, a sloop of war, and two bomketches, moored between the reef, within gunshot of the castle; and so well directed were their bombs and heavy artillery, that in less than 4 hours they had silenced the fire of 160 pieces of Mexican artillery, den obished all the outworks including the famous redoubt called El Caballero, and killed and wounded 600 men of the Mexican garrison.

"After 8 o'clock in the afternoon of the 27th, the Mexican commander in the castle hung out a signal for the cessation of hostilities, and begged to be allowed time to withdraw his wounded from the ruins of the fortifications. Admiral Baudin replied that he could consent to no truce, but would allow the Mexicans to retire from the fort if they capitulated. To this the Mexican general agreed, and withdrew his troops from the castle, which was immediately occupied by the French soldiers and marines.

"The Mexican army near Vera Cruz was 5,000 strong, but their officers did not consider themselves able to hold the town, commanded as it was by the guns of the castle, and the French admiral consented that 1000 of the Mexican troops should remain in the city to preserve order.

It was believed that negotiations had been commenced between the Mexican government and the French Admiral for the re-establishment of peace, and some time may elapse before the result is known.

The French Admiral, it was thought, would no longer hinder the vessels of all nations from trading to Vera Cruz.

We have here given all the particulars which have reached us. Of the ulterior designs of either the French or the Mexicans we are ignorant.

Trade and Travel West and South.—The number of steamboats going up at Cincinnati is 300. The interruption to navigation caused by the drought, is less that city and others in the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi, the loss of millions of dollars. The waters are now frozen up, so that the two greatest of our streams are being "available" until spring, there will have been a suspension of travel on these great natural routes of at least seven months. The people now feel the absolute necessity of rail roads directly to the Atlantic coast.—N. Y. Star.

Sacrilege.—We learn that about three weeks since, the Episcopal Church at Perth Amboy, in this estate was burglariously entered, and the Communion Table and its coverings stolen therefrom. The theft was first discovered on the Sabbath; and on Monday the Table was found at an auction store in Chatham street, New York. It appears that the thief possessed an unusual share of boldness—for, after the robbery, the table was wrapped in its coverings, was in open daylight carried on board a steamboat which touched at Amboy, and thus conveyed to New York. The thief has not yet been discovered.—Elizabethtown Journal.

Spirit of the Message.—The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser gives the following statement of the time occupied in the transmission of the President's Message from Washington to Boston:

"Reading all the stoppages and delays, and the sweeping of the North river, the message was delivered at the Post Office in the city in seven hours and twelve minutes. It reached Jersey City in nine hours and forty-two minutes. From Washington to Baltimore, 40 miles, the time was including stoppages, 1 hour 10 minutes. From Baltimore to Havre de Grace, 36 miles in 56 minutes. From Havre de Grace to Wilmington, 37 miles, 1 hour 21 minutes. From Wilmington to Philadelphia, 28 miles, 1 hour 21 minutes, including stoppages. From Philadelphia to Bordentown, 30 miles in 56 minutes. From Bordentown to Burlington, 20 miles in 40 minutes. From Burlington to Trenton, 10 miles in 20 minutes. From Trenton to Jersey City, 58 miles, 1 hour 30 minutes. From Jersey City to Elizabethtown, 9 miles, 20 minutes. From Elizabethtown to Newark, 10 miles, 20 minutes. From Newark to Jersey City, 9 miles, 20 minutes. From Jersey City to New York, 3 miles, 10 minutes. From Washington to Philadelphia, 130 miles, including all delays, 4 hours and 49 minutes.

The message reached Harrisburg, the capital of Pennsylvania, at half past seven o'clock on Tuesday evening, having been forwarded from Baltimore to York, by the Baltimore and Susquehanna railroad, in 2 hours and 25 minutes, thence to Harrisburgh by horse express, by Messrs. Stockton, Falls & Co. the mail contractors.

Toward Boston the message was carried by the steamer John W. Richmond, which in consequence of the fog did not leave this port until about 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning. She arrived at Providence at 4 o'clock, P. M. whence a train was despatched on the railroad; and it was received at the Boston Atlas office, before 7 o'clock in the evening.

INFORMATION WANTED.

DANIEL WILLIAMS left the dwelling of the subscriber on the 5th inst. He being a poor lad in his faculties have become so impaired, as to render him incapable of giving any account of himself or his place of residence. His dress consisted of a white hat much worn, a muleskin roundabout, red cloth vest, dark muleskin pantaloons, and a new pair of boots. Any information that may be given of this unfortunate person to the subscriber, in Westfield, will be gratefully received and suitably rewarded.

JOHN DUNHAM.

Westfield, Essex co. N. J.

Editors are earnestly requested to give the above an insertion.

A Wolf.—The largest wolf ever caught in Penobscott county, Maine, may be seen at the store of D Hill and Son, on Main-st. He measures six feet from the snout to the tip of the tail. We understand he was taken last week on the east branch of the Penobscot by Mr. John Turner. On the night he was taken the camp was visited by a family of thirteen wolves, the captive being one of the number. They attacked a pork barrel which set outside the camp, and carried off its contents. Numerous carcasses of deer and that of a caraboo were discovered in the woods destroyed, it is supposed by these ferocious animals. Speaking of wolves, as Sammy Weller would say, reminds us of a bear, weighing about 500 lbs. which was also taken at Carmel last week, and is now exposed for exhibition at the Market House.—Bangor Whig.

Ingenious and Novel Exhibition.—In the course of the week, Messrs. Lewis & Bartholomew will exhibit at Amory Hall, their wonderful panorama, the "Battle of Bunker Hill." We lately copied from an English paper, an account of a model of the field of Waterloo; but this is more than a model of a battle field; it is a dramatic representation of the first grand struggle for the conquest, related pantomimically. It is true, but so well told as to create astonishment at the indescribable skill of the artists. It has been exhibited at Portland, where it was made, and has been there, the attraction of attractions. It shows every thing connected with the memorable battle; the Yankee recruits, and the British regulars; Breed's Hill and Bunker's hill; Coop's Hill; the town of Charleston; the shipping; artillery men at their pieces; boats hurrying to and fro; we hear the roar of cannon and the rattle of musketry; we see houses and hilltop crowded with people, and perceive the fight increasing with ardor and raging with obstinate attack and repulse, until the conflagration, a master piece of art, ends the exhibition, and leaves us with a more palpable impression of the events and horrors of that mighty occasion, than a calm and sluggish imagination can possibly conceive from mere perusal of historical records.

The exhibition is probably the most laboriously perfected work of the kind ever exhibited in this country or in any other. It is the work of the same artists who exhibited the "burning of the Royal Tar," at sea, and which was so much admired.—Boston Times.

Substitute for flax, hemp, and Silk.—Specimens were exhibited at the fair of the American Institute, of fibrous foliage, and of foliaceous fibres, presented by Dr. H. Perrine, of tropical Florida. These superior substitutes for common flax and common hemp merit a most distinguished notice, on account of their immense national importance to the agriculture, manufacture and commerce of the United States. These fine and coarse foliaceous fibres are obtained from the agave green leaves, by scraping only. These fibres are easily separable and propagate themselves on the most worthless soils, and will hence afford new staples to the northern and southwestern states, of still greater importance than all their old staples combined, of rice, tobacco, sugar, and even of cotton.

The Agave Sisalana, or hemp aloes, which yields the Sisal hemp, propagates itself on the most arid, sandy and stony soils.

The Musa Abaca, or hemp banana, which yields the tropical flax, or vegetable silk, propagates itself on the most humid, marshy, and even fairy grounds.

The Bromelia Pita, or forest pine apple, which yields the tropical flax, or vegetable silk, propagates itself on the undergrowth of sandy and stony woods.

As the specimens of foliaceous fibres will remain at the office of the American Institute for exhibition, we recommend these superior substitutes for flax and hemp, to the special examination and profession of all real githeni patriots and talented statesmen of the Union.

A most beautiful specimen of raw silk from the Bromelia Pita, prepared by a new chemical process, was also exhibited. The pure, clear, lustrous silky fibre, has been completely superated from the other vegetable substance. The manner of accomplishing this, was not communicated. A sample of cloth, equal to fine cambric, was also brought with it to the fair, and exhibited by Mr. Lawrence of Jersey city. These and

We have for sale, and now keep for sale, the excellent Tract known, forming a small book of about 200 pages, which should possess it, and read it often. It will have a powerful influence in forming the good desirable qualities of mind.

In our last paper, we noticed a fresh invasion of Canada, from the region about Detroit. Subsequently, the patriots were defeated, and all killed, taken prisoners or deserted.

Congress,

Monday, Dec. 17th.

Mr. Wright's bill for the indefinite postponement of the Fourth Instalment, was taken up.

Mr. Clay's Amendment to postpone it for one year was lost, 17 yeas, to 26 nays.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. Wall's bill, to prevent counterfeiting foreign coin, was then ordered to be engrossed.

In the house, a resolution was offered calling on the President for copies of the correspondence between him and Gov. Ritner, in relation to the Philadelphia disturbance. After a very warm and exciting debate, the resolution passed almost unanimously.

Mr. Read, of Massachusetts, presented a petition for the recognition of Hayti. Was objected to the reception. Adams contended for the right of petition. Much hard hitting and calling to order. The house adjourned without action.

Tuesday, Dec. 18.

In Senate, nothing of importance.

In the house, the debate on the reception of the Haytian petition was continued. Mr. Grinnell spoke at length in favor of it. Wise and Legare vehemently opposed it. A motion to lay it on the table was lost, 65 to 121. It was received, 157 to 22; and referred to the committee on foreign affairs, 105 to 58.

Another petition from Massachusetts was then offered, similar to the above, which caused much exciting debate. On Wednesday it was referred to the committee on foreign affairs.

Wednesday, Dec. 19.

In the Senate, Col. R. M. Johnson, the Vice President of the U. States appeared and took the chair.

Mr. Rives offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information respecting his operations with the United States bank.

In the house, a message was received from the President, agreeably to previous resolution, transmitting the correspondence with Gov. Ritner; which caused some angry debate.

Thursday, Dec. 20.

In the Senate, Mr. Rives spoke at length on his resolution offered yesterday. He gave his views boldly against the administration policy and the sub-treasury, and in favor of the state banks, and preferred the latter of Mr. Biddle to the Treasury report, as exhibiting more financial knowledge. Messrs. Wright, Niles and Calhoun participated in the debate.

In the house, nothing of importance occurred except the presentation of petitions, many of them Anti-slavery.

Letter from Harrisburg.—On Wednesday last a resolution passed the senate that that body will not recognize the Van Buren portion of the house as the true house of representatives.

The Evening Star says that Mr Price's furniture and fur-a-ti-ousand collars more than it cost—all owing to the determination of the good wives who attended to secure some of the bargains.

Banking in Georgia.—A bill establishing a system of free banking, similar in almost every respect to that of New York, has passed the lower House of the Legislature of Georgia, and it is thought will also pass the senate.

Our Globe Illustrated.

THIS Work is published in weekly numbers, 32 of which will form a splendid volume. Each number will contain two hundred and about eight pages of closely printed matter. It is of the quarto size, and is certainly the most cheap work yet offered for sale.—Price 12 1-2 cts. per number.

Our Globe Illustrated is intended to be what its title implies, a view of the most important and beautiful parts of the whole world, which will be presented to the mind under the two-fold form of handsome engravings and interesting descriptions. It is made so very cheap, because the publishers hope to sell a very large edition, and therefore desire to accommodate those which consumer even only an important object.

It will be perceived, by the annexed table of contents that their plan is to give as great a variety as possible.—We pass from one part of the world to another, in such a way as to excite young persons to gain a general knowledge of the History and Geography of the World. A judicious parent or teacher will find that each one of our parts will furnish him with the means of giving a large lesson to his pupils.

When we state that more than fifty thousand dollars has already been expended upon the work, it will be apparent that great expectations have been formed of success. Orders have for some time been received at the rate of twenty numbers per day. When the considerable use as a family book is taken into consideration, the facility which it affords in teaching geography and history, and in short, in all points of view we consider mainly its tendency to implant a love of literature, it strongly recommends itself to families and schools. It will have a very beneficial effect in cultivating a love of the fine arts, and we hope will contribute to the formation of a correct taste in parts of the country where specimens of good engraving are not readily to be found.

Stoves,

Cheaper than ever!

THOMPSON & CO. wish to inform the public generally, that they have now on hand a large assortments of Stoves of the most approved patterns, performing good fire wood and coal stoves, which they offer their business next Spring, they intend offering their whole assortment much cheaper than they were ever before offered to this market. They have the agency for Stanley's Rotary of all sizes, Pentley's, Church & Stanley's, James', and all sizes of the most plain.

Of the above named stoves we have a full assortment, and we also have some of several other kinds. We also have a large number of second hand stoves, which we will sell extremely low; they consist chiefly of Pennsylvania, Clermont's, Lyne's, James', Onley's, Wilson's, Gillet and Nine Plates; they are all fitted out with fixtures, and in complete order. We hope those wishing to buy will give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident we can suit them.

Russia Sheet Iron Stoves.

We have a more complete assortment of this article than we ever had before; and as they are known to answer any other stove for fuel, we recommend them entirely, that they are now made handsomer and better than ever; and we will sell them from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than last year.

New York Mirror.

Will be issued on the 20th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Inman, and Views of Trinity Church. These are both executed by steel equity and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings to be made for the work. Richness and variety, as to subjects, and style, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and correct selections from the new publications, both American and English—gleanings in science, art, literature—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this work—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the taste and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the sacred drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous, reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, and chemistry, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued these desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the beginning of the splendid volume, can be accommodated, by directing their communications, post paid to the office, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of ENOS SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Pay, Coe, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superior, to its predecessors; and it is confidently asserted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, neither pains, labour, time, nor industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the parlour table of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the accomplished student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement. Any person who will forward to us a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, near the Broadway. It is elegantly printed on the extra super-royal quarto form, with double, treble, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a contemporaneous of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Table of Contents. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance, to be forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers receiving out of the city of New York. Communications post paid to be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Dysentery, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much relieved, after having taken two of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active physicks, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and is resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended especially for neuralgia a disease which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. I believe that they will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case presented vomiting, and for the severest sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and French Languages, and in all the usual branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, due care is taken to promote good health, that the mind be correctly and carefully, and equal care to induce moral habits, and the love of good order on the part of the pupils, as active. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety in all of the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are considered as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing, fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $38 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected, however, at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may be assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are accepted to offer ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.
